THE TWO LILIES.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY ELSIE MAY.

A mother went into her garden one morn,
When dew drops were glist'ning on rose bud and thorn,
To gaze on her heart's cherished flowers;
For there she had fostered two lily buds rare
With purest affection and motherly care;
She watched them unfolding their leaves bright and fair,
In the sunlight of home's pleasant bowers.

Her cares and her sorrows alike were forgot,
While nearing, this morning, the hallowed spot,
Where bloomed love's most radiant token;
But, alas! how soon hopes that are earth-born depart,
How quivers the soul beneath sorrow's keen dart!
A pang, as of death, strikes that kind, lo'ing heart,
For the buds from their stems had been broken.

An angel had passed, and, beholding the flowers,
Had feared that the sun of life's warm, noontide hours,
Would cause their rare beauty to wither;
So he took one away to the far border land,
On the bounds of Eternity's silvery strand,
Then came for the other, and His choral band
Convoyed both through the pearl gate together.

Oh! weep not, fond mother, thy buds knew no blight,
They've sprung to full blossom in Heaven's soft light,
By the spoiler no more to be riven;
To the gates where they entered, oh! lift up thine eye
From the darkness of earth to the sunshine on high,
And think that they bloom in the bowers of the sky,
"For of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

CONGO, THE CONJURER.

A STORY OF SHOW LIFE.

CHAPTER VI.

JACKO MAKES A FRIEND.

The two supposed Gipsies walked about the town, made some purchases, wandered into the market-place, and finally dined at a small inn, where they heard a good deal of the gossip of the place. Then they strolled about again, when suddenly Monk drew himself back into a dark alley, as an Italian organ-grinder came slowly up the street. He was a pale, saturnine, hook-nosed chap, who appeared to find his burden very heavy. Perched on the organ was a small monkey, with a very sharp face, and dressed, as usual, with crimson spangles and gold. It sat still enough until opposite a rather showy fruit-shop, the master of which was standing at the door. Then the monkey got up, and began to gesticulate in a very excited state in the direction of the fruiterer. The Italian only growled, and was moving onwards, when the shopkeeper spoke.

"He wants a nut, Signor Italian!" he cried.

The organ-grinder, who had always an eye to the main chance, turned round and approached the shop, on which the man gave the monkey a fine large walnut. The animal clutched it with its left paw, and then with its right took off a small cap it wore and bowed to the man.

"Well, I never!" said the shopkeeper, laughing and shaking his fat sides. "That's a wonderful animal; shouldn't wonder if he spoke next!"

And he handed another nut. The monkey looked puzzled, his two paws being full, but would not lose one of the coveted treasures. The Italian swore at him in his own language, but the monkey went on nibbling away at the nuts. The shopkeeper still laughed. Whether the man was angry with the monkey for not showing more obedience, or because the man had not given him money, he took a whip that hung by his side and was about to lash the poor animal, when Lea rushed out and caught the other's arm.

"Don't hurt the poor beast," he said, "he did no harm."

"Basta!" cried the man, white with fury.

At this moment Monk appeared, just as the monkey, as if certain of the other's friendship, leaped on his shoulders, and clutching his hair, held firm.

"Another scrape!" roared Monk. "There, don't get in a passion, Gregorio, son of my heart; there was no harm done, and the youngster is my friend."

"Gregorio, son of my heart," did not appear at all flattered by the recognition, but all his bellicose propensities ceased.

"Per Hercule!" he said, "what did he want to interfere with my monkey for?"

"I will buy him," replied the boy, who had quite taken a fancy to the little brute.

"Corpo di Bacco!" laughed the other; "but you must have money. I should want two pounds for him—and then he goes for nothing, as I am tired of the beast."

Our hero, without the slightest hesitation, paid the money, the beast being exchanged and transferred to him. Monk laughed at the conceit, telling Lea his money would not last long at this rate, but at the same time made no opposition to the purchase. The boy at once walked up to the shop, and bought a bag of nuts for his new protege, leaving Monk and the Italian together.

"What are you doing so far from London?" said the showman, sternly.

"Basta! the fellows taunt me with my accident," replied the Italian.

"Accident!" cried Monk, hotly; "I call it a cold-clooded murder!"

"I was tried and acquitted," said the other, sullenly. "What more can you ask?"

"Nothing, friend of my soul," was the sneering reply of the other, "only that, if your name were to leak out here, the very boys who dance to your hideous hurdy-gurdy would stone you. Take my advice and leave the town before night."

With which lofty words he turned away and rejoined Lea, who was quietly feeding his monkey. He never turned to see how the organ-grinder took his dismissal. He waited until the other was a little distance off, and, with a fearful, horrible imprecation of menace, walked away. The two moved along in silence until the boy suddenly stopped and pointed to a bill just posted, offering a hundred pounds reward for his apprehension.

"Hunted like a wild beast!" he said.

"Come away; your reading it may attract attention!" whispered Monk; "and here comes Pharaoh and his old mother—a worthy couple."

They were in a cart, and were sent on foraging duty, to purchase certain things which were necessary to the tribe, such as tobacco, beer and spirits, and tea and snuff for the old women who had become attached to such vanities. Monk addressed them as they passed, adding some commission of his own, to which the mother promised to attend, Pharaoh sullenly declining to utter one word.

"My lad," said Monk sternly, "do not learn bad habits, or you will be sent over the hedge before long. I am not used to be treated thus."

"Are you not? Then learn it!" muttered the other, as they rode off. "I'll have the hearty blood of the house-dwellers before I have done with them!"

At the moment he leaped out of the cart, as his eye caught the words:—

£100 REWARD.—Ran away from home, it is believed, in the company of a showman, tinker, or something of that sort, a boy, &c.

Pharaoh greedily devoured the document, after which he read it out to his mother.

"He! he! he!" said the old hag; "if it should be him! But it's a deal of money. Who are you to apply to, sonny darling?"

"The head constable," growled the boy—"that won't do; they'd get it out of us and take the reward. No; I must find out the friends. A hundred pounds in gold!—why, mother, we could take Zelah away and set up a tribe for ourselves. Will you go back alone? I will stay and watch."

The ancient hag agreed, and two hours later re-entered the camp, where she found the whole party busily discussing their evening meal, while waiting the arrival of the good things which the old woman had been sent to fetch. No notice was taken of the absence of Pharaoh, whose sullen humor was far from making him popular. Lea was one of the chief to rejoice at his being away, as it enabled him to laugh and talk with Zelah unheeded, as well as to amuse her by the antics of his monkey, which kept the volatile Gipsies in one roar of laughter. His odd way of eating, his comical way of picking a bone, of cracking nuts, was infinitely diverting to these savages of the English woods. The time was whiled away pleasantly enough until Nature summoned all to sleep. Lea took his monkey with him; and the animal, already won as much by Kindness as he had been before by severity, nestled in the straw beside him, and slept, as doubtless happy Jackos will, until morning summoned all to breakfast. On this occasion Monk went into town by himself, the Gipsies dispersed to their several avocations, and Lea remained in camp. Monk had some special business. Lea was only too glad. Once again he was a boy—a joyous boy, and in company with pretty Zelah, who took to him wonderfully; and with his monkey, who would never leave him. He wandered into the wood in search of nuts and flowers. A merry, joyous trio they were, Jacko being not the least delighted. Freedom such as this he could not realise: it was ecstasy. Still the animal never offered to escape; but came back at his master's call and perched on his shoulder. At last, when quite tired and heated, they returned to the camp, towards which others, thinking of the inner man, were also converging. As soon as dinner was prepared, all who were ready seated themselves, like ancient foresters, under the green wood tree, and enjoyed their food. Suddenly, as they were thus busy, there came a distant cry, like that of the bittern, a signal of alarm and distress, which made all leap to their feet. A second and third time it was heard; and then, hot with haste, angry and out of breath, Monk appeared upon the scene.

"The constable!" he said, with hasty glance at some suspicious feathers and skins, which were immediately cast into a large fire and covered over with dry sticks which flared and smoked in a way soon to destroy all identity. "And now, my boy," he added, "we must away. The evil hunters of men are upon us, and your enemy is at hand."

Lea rose, shook hands with Zelah very sadly, and prepared to follow his protector. At this moment a crash was heard on more than one side, and before any action could be organised, Charles Everton and a force of constables came in, mounted and armed. The chief of the party at once pointed out our hero, despite his disguise, and one of the men caught him by the arm. The Gipsies, with a sullen murmur, took up their guns and assumed a menacing attitude.

"Beware!" shouted the chief officer. "If you interfere with us in the execution of our duty we shall arrest the lot. Transportation and penal servitude, you know!" imprisonment. The very idea to a Gipsy was horrible in the extreme. They all drew back. The officers, headed by their employer, took advantage of their hesitation to secure Arthur and seat him before one of the men on horseback. The monkey would have followed, but was savagely hurled to the ground, and took refuge with Zelah.

After this the whole party rode off, without Charles Everton condescending to speak a word. The Gipsies, meanwhile, remained sullen and moody, until Monk rose and addressed them, which he did in warm and fervid language. All listened in silence, and then every man dispersed to his avocations.

Night came and the forest shades were picturesquely lighted up by numerous bright and cheerful fires. All the tribe were collected save and except Pharaoh. His mother sat by Zelah, trying to turn her head by promises of handsome dress, bright silk handkerchiefs, and other Gipsy finery. But the girl was grave and sad, and gave her whole thoughts to the poor monkey. Suddenly a step was heard in the forest, and Pharaoh appeared, with a kind of haughty stride. As soon as he entered the circle of expectant Gipsies he was caught by two stalwart men and pinioned.

"What means this tom-foolery? I don't like it, Lanah and Salee. I shall resent it."

"Silence, traitor! you have for money betrayed the stranger within our gates—the boy who came here and shared our hospitality. Hush! deny it not. You were seen in the company of the thief-takers—of him who offered the gold. Search him."

Two canvas bags of fifty pounds each were handed to the speaker.

"Give me my money!" he roared. "It is mine!"

"The money of a vile traitor is forfeited," the other cried, casting it to the boys and girls, who at once began to scramble for the coins, "and the traitor is banished. Go, take what is yours and leave us forever. If found near the camp you will be shot as a stray dog."

The youth was loosened and freed. He turned to his mother, who had already risen, and then went up to Zelah.

The girl, still clasping the monkey, stood up and faced him.

"My tribe has cast me out for the sake of a house-dweller; but you are my promised wife; you will not desert me?" he cried.

"Go! I spit upon a traitor and a coward!" she exclaimed. "Zelah knows you not!"

As if seized by a kind of frenzy, the youth drew a keen, long-bladed knife from his girdle and dashed at Zelah. But Monk held him in a grasp of iron, with a pistol at his breast. The knife was hurled from his grasp.

"Boys," said the chief of the tribe, "give him the law—a running stream—and when he has crossed that—away, let him die like a dog!"

Pharaoh made no reply, whispered a word to the old hag, his mother, and darted away into the forest, fearlessly followed, a few minutes later, by some of the Gipsies, well armed. But when they came back none had got up to him. The traitor and attempted assassin had escaped!

CHAPTER VII.

THE OLD SCHOOL HOUSE.

Ramblers' Hall took its name from a valley in which it was situated. This place had been known as Ramblers' Hole for many long years, and hence, naturally, a house built in the dreary hollow received a similar appellation. The hollow was surrounded by pine woods of the most gloomy character, amid which the wind whistled with a grim hollowness, which sounded, at times, like the storm fiend straggling through the flapping rigging of a doomed ship. The house itself might have been the country residence of a misanthropic gentleman, a private mad house, or a convent of ladies, determined not only to seclude themselves from the world, but to see such scraps of it as were forced under their noses in the gloomiest aspect possible. It had eight windows, and a door to the road, and the eight windows were barred and the door was studded with nails, like a prison gate. Its walls were high, provided with a revolving row of iron spikes, and further ornamented with jagged glass, suggestive of bleeding hands and gaping wounds. It was kept by a certain Mr. John Tasker, supported by four teachers or assistants of a rough and stern character, to say nothing of two mean, tale bearing sneaks of ushers, who acted as spies on the whole community. The system was all spike, cane and birch, with the alternative of dark hole and bread and water. To this regime was the brave boy—the lad who loved the free air, and yet was willing to submit to proper restrictions of a good school—condemned. Mr. Charles Everton had himself handed him over to the master, with strict injunctions to tame his insolent spirit, but, above all, to see that, under no circumstances, he escaped from the custodianship of Ramblers' Hall.

Arthur saw at once that he was handed over to a prison, not a school. It is true, that many things were taught very correctly; but the gloom, the want of emulation, the tyranny with which knowledge was imparted of itself, precluded much advantage being derived from such inculcation of knowledge. And then the boys. Such a timorous, poor spirited, wretched set of children of seven and youths of eighteen, had never, surely, been collected before. They were outcasts from home. Some were hardened boys, upon whom kindness had been thrown away; these were a small minority. The rest were orphans, sons of dead fathers—beings whose existence was a reproach, if not a disgrace. The first time they turned out in a long yard, miscalled a play ground, Arthur Everton was able to judge them. They walked about listlessly, with their hands in their pockets, and biting their nails, but not one attempted to speak or play. Arthur, who, after an almost sleepless night, had risen with a resolute mind to face his troubles, looked at them with awe. As to himself, his mind was made up. He would escape at any price. When he saw out of thirty boys at least ten as old or older than himself, he mused on the weakness of juvenile human nature, which submitted to be thus tyrannized over.

"Do you never play at any game?" said Arthur, at last, addressing a tall boy, who, leaning against a tree, was chewing a piece of wood.

"Sometimes. Jones there is famous at getting up walking funerals," replied the other.

Arthur started back amazed.

"No ball—no cricket; no games?" he cried, in an appalled tone.

"No; except down in the field, when we brick-bat a cat sometimes," continued the other, whose name was Regden.

"Don't you talk, tell stories, and all that sort of thing?" Arthur Everton went on.

"What do you do?"

"When I get up I think of breakfast; when that's gone I think of dinner; and when that's gone I think of supper; after that of bed."

Arthur would have replied, when a sallow face protruded from behind a tree, and, showing a row of fang-like yellow teeth, spoke.

"Grumbling again, Reg?"

The youth, though taller and perhaps stouter than the usher, shook all over.

"Sneak and spy!" said Arthur, "what do you want?"

"Oh, lor!" cried the amazed tell-tale—alas! a scholar once, who, having no home in the wide world, had elected to stay as an assistant—"what'll master say?"

"I know what will happen if you report me," indignantly exclaimed Arthur.

"What?"

Arthur stepped up to him, caught him by the collar and put his fist to his nose.

"One word, and I'll pound you within an inch of your life, you mean, sorry specimen of a man! Do you hear?"

"Ye-es," trembled the other.

Upon which Arthur let him loose, and he sneaked away into the house, followed by a jeering murmur, that sounded like the ghosts of some dead cheer, once given by real boys in that unearthly place.

"You've done it?" said Regden, whose face was even more livid than usual, while he shivered visibly.

"Have I? We shall see about that," replied Arthur, whistling.

Not wishing, however, to prolong the discussion, he proposed some common school game, and was soon busily engaged in teaching it to the anxious and attentive boys. Just, however, as they were beginning to understand it, and to warm under its influence, a bell rang. All fell into line, as if by magic, and marched into school, according, not to age, but size. If the yard was cold, dreary, naked, the school-room was still more so—and this is too common a mistake—with nothing but benches and forms. The rest was naked walls. The assistants were all present, so were the ushers. The master was absent. School began, and soon nothing was heard but the confused but hushed murmur of boys learning their tasks. Arthur looked at his as appointed on a list referring to his books, and having learned it years before, pushed his book away. A low hush passed up the room, and turning round, Arthur saw the principal come in. He was a gaunt man, a bony man, and an ugly man. His face was narrow, his eyes ferret-like, and his complexion waxy. He was dressed in black, seedy and rusty, while his right hand clutched a heavy cane—a kind of bamboo.

"You are inattentive, sir," he said, as he passed our hero, pointing to the closed book.

"I know the lesson," was the cool reply.

Mr. Tasker made no answer, but went on until he reached his desk, where he seated himself amidst hushed silence.

"The new boy," he said.

Arthur with a bound was before ace very white, but quite cool and determined.

"So, sir, on the very first day of your[illegible] you incite my pupils to rebellion, you insult one of my assistants, you call him low names, and threaten him with personal violence. Such conduct cannot pass unpunished. Strip, sir," cried Tasker.

"Sir," said Arthur, very firmly, "it is not my intention to submit to corporal punishment. I never did, I never will. If you attempt it, I will defend myself; if you overcome me by force, I will set fire to your house. I don't mind a year or two imprisonment to have the pleasure of exposing the secrets of your infamous den. I can call it nothing else."

Mr. Tasker sat paralyzed, overcome with passion and fury, and yet to a certain extent awed. But his rage overcame his reason, and he raised his heavy cane. Arthur snatched up a ruler, and put himself in an attitude of defence.

"Look out," whispered some boy from amidst the awed crowd; and Arthur did look out to see the usher crawling up behind to attack him.

Round darted the boy, and striking the other with his left hand full in the face, he went sprawling on the ground. Something like another ghostly cheer was heard, which, as the reporters say, was instantly suppressed.

"Mr. Arthur Everton," said the master, in a low tone of concentrated fury, "this rebellion against the authority of those placed over you is monstrous. Go to your room. Mr. Ashton, see him safe and bring me the key."

Our hero bowed to what he recognized as a legitimate exercise of authority, and went out to his chamber. It was a small barred chamber on the front, and had a stout door. Arthur went in and seated himself with something of the feeling of a prisoner of war who has been captured after a desperate and heroic deed of valor. Such was his character, that he thought not of himself, but of the other poor wretches doomed to suffer without hope of escape. While these ideas were passing through his mind, he seated himself at his window, and looked out through the bars at the dismal prospect beyond. He had not the faintest idea of remaining in the house, but still to escape he knew was no easy task. About twelve, his school books, marked, were sent up to him, with a pitcher of water and a large loaf, and there he sat, brooding over the familiar books until night fell, and he was left in total darkness, made gloomier by the dark shadows that fell over the place.

CHAPTER VIII.

A GLIMPSE OF LIGHT.

One whole week did his imprisonment last, varied only by the opening of his door once a day by a master, who remained outside while a domestic did up his room. His food was then given to him—still bread and water—and then once more he was left alone. At the expiration of the week he noticed the girl who did his room looking at him with a peculiar glance. She was a sturdy specimen of a country wench, with ruddy cheeks, and fierce, black eyes.

Arthur stared. The poor girl, probably, was taking pity on him, but as she was not able to speak, her signs and contortions of countenance were wholly unintelligible. She went her way unappreciated. That evening, though he was low and faint from want of exercise and monotony of food, Arthur sat longer than usual at his open window. As usual, no one came that way. But about nine o'clock something moved in the pine forest opposite, and in the dim gloom Arthur made out the form of a woman.

"Whoever you may be," said Arthur, in low, clear tones, "stop and speak to a poor prisoner!"

An odd jabbering sound followed, and Arthur knew that it was Jacko.

"Be still, brute," said the gentle voice of Zelah; "we have found him."

And the Gipsy girl bounded into the road.

"Is that you, Lea?" she asked.

"It is," he replied.

"Have you a piece of cord?" she continued.

A ball of twine is generally one of the many things to be found in a boy's pocket, and one end being fastened to the bars, Arthur cast out the ball itself. Zelah then hurriedly told him to pull it up, and he did so several times, until he found himself in possession of a flask of brandy, a cold fowl, two pounds of ham, lights, a number of short wax-ends, a file, and a small bottle of corrosive acid, with full directions. Few words passed, as they might be overheard, and when all was secured, Zelah, who had the greatest difficulty in keeping the monkey quiet, bade him good night. She would be there every evening at the same hour.

Arthur, who began to feel himself another Richard Cœur de Lion with his faithful Blondell, lighted his candle and began to make a hearty supper in defiance of all medical rules. Never had he enjoyed anything so much. The fowl and ham was glorious, the brandy and water nectar; but, above all, the glimpse of hope was paradise. He put away every sign of the feast in his box, and, after reading a book, concealed in his trunk, to calm his nerves, cast himself on his bed, and, with a fervent prayer to the only friend of all mankind, went to sleep. Next day the usual visit came round, and the girl, more excited than the day before, finished by putting a letter into Arthur's hand, while the watch was pacing up and down in the passage. He hastily concealed it. Then the master came in and informed Arthur that his term of imprisonment was up. In consideration of his solitary confinement the past was to be overlooked altogether.

Arthur simply bowed graciously. He could not trust himself to speak. The door was locked behind him. Hastily he opened the letter and read as follows:—

DEAR BOY.—We have discovered your retreat. Heaven forgive me for all the promises I have made to the girl, Mary! Some of them you must keep. I fancy a file and a couple of guineas would be the most acceptable. Before you commence operations on the bars and bolts, I have conceived an idea—a grand and bold idea for your rescue. But you must be calm; you must appear sorry and repentant as far as you can, and keep on good terms with Mary. Should we only carry it out—it will be so glorious a victory, I can scarcely believe it to be true. To-morrow I will waylay the girl on her usual trip to market, and send you full particulars. Ever yours,

The delight experienced by the boy may be easily conceived. Hope is never extinct in the human breast, but when it comes unexpectedly its influence is all powerful. Arthur could scarcely sit still, could scarcely eat, though at last he conquered this weakness and made a hearty meal. Then he was calmer, and awaited the visit of Zelah with comparative calm. But hours passed away, a distant church clock struck twelve, and yet she came not. His hopes and spirits considerably dampened. Arthur went to bed to dream such dreams as murder sleep and do little for the health of the slumberer. He awoke pale and downcast; but carefully concealing all his secret supplies, was ready for the summons to breakfast. There was no starvation at Ramblers' Hall, though the food was coarse in the extreme, except that milk from their own cows was abundant and good.

Arthur could scarcely touch his meal, however, but drank some milk. He looked seriously ill. Now, Mr. Charles Everton, though earnestly in his heart wishing the death of his step-son, had, when putting him to school, given no hint of such desire. He had, on the contrary, given a very liberal sum to secure his being kept from escaping. What he might do if the boy did not succumb to this solitary and hateful life, it is scarcely possible to say. Tasker examined him with a keen eye.

"You had better stroll about the play ground and garden this morning," he said, gruffly; "it is not my wish to make you suffer more than your deserved punishment."

"Thank you, sir," replied Arthur, in quite a humble tone, which made all the other boys start with surprise and regret.

Already conquered! One of the masters led him to the play ground and pointed to a gate at the end.

"Through that you will find the garden," he said, and abruptly disappeared.

Arthur, feeling already a sense of relief and invigoration, entered the garden. It was a large piece of ground, surrounded by high walls, given chiefly up to the cultivation of vegetables for the school. Arthur strolled about until he found a rustic seat and table, generally sacred to the use of Mrs. Tasker and her daughters. It was quite untenanted now. Arthur seated himself and began to think. Scarcely had he done so when he heard a hissing sound at some distance. Looking around, he saw Mary at a window, making signs to him. Arthur, not comprehending them, simply nodded, at which the girl laughed and disappeared. Soon he saw her bending low beside a hedge and making towards him. Arthur recollected the hints thrown out by Monk, and drew two pounds from a secret recess in his clothes, which, fortunately for him, had not been searched. Mary, who was rather nervous and trembling, seated herself on the bench.

"You darling girl!" said Arthur, with considerable tact for a boy, putting his arm round her waist and kissing her, "what is the matter?"

"If master should see me!" she muttered, without any very timorous struggle. "Take this——"

And she slipped another letter into his hands, which he was about to open, when she cautioned him to retire to some more sheltered retreat. They were too near the house.

"Thanks—many thanks," he said, pressing the two sovereigns upon her. "Buy yourself a new cap and ribbon, and never repent having been kind to a poor boy."

"I didn't want the money!" she faltered, but not refusing it. "I would have served you for nothing. But I am anxious to leave here, and every pound helps me."

While Arthur was giving her a parting salute, a pale, haggard face, protruded through the hedge and glared at them with a malicious leer.

"Oh!" said the usher, "this is your little game, is it? Won't I tell Tasker!"

Arthur turned upon the spy with a menacing glance, but Mary stopped him.

"Don't notice the thing!" she said, in atone of bitter contempt. "Take my advice, Joe Pond, and keep a still tongue in your head. I know what I know, and have a tongue in my head."

"What do you kiss him for?" sniggered Joe Pond. "You never would me!"

"Because he is a brave, good boy, and wants nursing," said Mary, boldly; "and you are a bad, sneaking lad, who wants kicking; and if I were a man I'd do it! Go—thief!"

With a terrible contraction of the facial muscles the spy retired, and Mary, after a few parting words to Arthur, left him to himself. As soon as he was quite alone he read the new letter quite through, with a grim smile and a wildly beating heart. It was almost too good news to be true; but even if this extraordinary plan were not carried out, he had other means of escape. He was certain he could depend upon Mary.

OUR PORTRAIT GALLERY.

JOHN ROBINSON,
THE VETERAN SHOWMAN.

We insert on our first page a correct likeness of "old" John Robinson, the veteran showman of the United States, as being most appropriate, at this time in particular, as an accompaniment to the elaborate description of the various traveling menageries and circuses for the season of 1872, which will be found elsewhere in this issue of the CLIPPER. John Robinson, the subject of our illustration, was born in Charleston, S. C., on the 5th of April, 1805, and therefore is now a few days over sixty-seven years of age. Mr. Robinson commenced his career as a showman at the age of fourteen, in a most humble position, at a salary of $4 per month, board included, but soon after his employers increased his monthly pay to $8, and at this figure he worked as groom, canvasman, property boy, and ticket seller for the season. In those early days the pavilion only of a show was made of canvas, the side walls being boarded up to the proper height with planks. Mr. Robinson neglected no opportunity that presented itself to "practice in the ring," and rings at that time were made on the surface of the ground by bending boards into a circle, the idea, as afterwards adopted, and still in use of excavating the surface of the show ground, and forming a "bank" of earth around the circle, not having been then dreamed of. At the termination of his first "tenting season," Mr. Robinson, by indomitable industry and perseverance, and the most rigid economy, had not only purchased a horse, but was also enabled to stand upright on its back, and maintain his position while the animal galloped around the circle. After going into winter quarters, Mr. Robinson hired three other horses, which in the following spring he purchased on credit. During the winter following his first show season he practiced riding a four-horse act, under circumstances most unfavorable, his ring for practice being formed in an open barn yard, covered with snow, which he removed from the centre and with which he constructed a snow-bank circle. Notwithstanding these obstacles he made such progress in his riding that he readily obtained, early in the spring, a good engagement to travel with a circus, and in addition to performing such manual labor as he was called upon to do about the show, he was to ride his, what in after years was known as "John Robinson's great four-horse demon act." By his strict adherence to economy, and after passing through all the trials and vicissitudes incidental to showmen of that early day, he found himself, at the expiration of his fifth season, the owner of a number of good horses, with money sufficient to equip and start a circus on his own account, and from that time to the present day his career as a showman has been onward and upwards. He has been the first instructor of hundreds in the profession, some of whom have passed to that "bourne from whence no traveler returns," and others are still left to relate their adventures while appreciated to "Old John." He was the appointed guardian of three of the most expert equestrians the world has ever produced—James Hernandez, Thomas McCollom and James Robinson. John Robinson is now at the ripe age of '67, in the full enjoyment of good health, a millionaire in wealth, a highly respected citizen of the "Queen City of the West," Cincinnati, with open doors in his palatial residence to all visitors, who have appropriately styled his private mansion "Liberty Hall." "Old John" is the acknowledged War Horse of showmen, and bids fair to have his light shine for many a year to come. Mr. Robinson has reared a large family, all the members of which have been adopted into the profession of their father, and they can truly be termed "chips of the old block," worthy sons of their veteran sire. The great show, of which he is still the nominal head, is managed by his oldest son, John F. Robinson, Jr., and it is a fact patent to all showmen that "the mantle of the father" has admirably fallen on the shoulders of his son, John, Jr., who is now the head and front of one of the most elaborate and costly exhibitions this country has ever produced.

CLOSING AN ARGUMENT.—An intolerable bore having talked a friend nearly out of his senses, finally struck out on "the oyster," which he called "one of the most remarkable specimens of creative wisdom extant," when his friend interrupted him, and "closed the debate," with the exclamation, "The oyster! Ah, yes, the oyster is a glorious fellow—he always knows when to shut up!"

JONES said to Hawkins, a crusty old bachelor:—"What a pity that poor old Golden has gone blind. Loss of sight is a terrible thing, and the poor fellow's eyes are quite sealed up." "Let him marry, then!" exclaimed the waspish old celibate, "let him marry, and if that don't open his eyes, then—his case is indeed hopeless."

IN AND OUT.—One of the caravan orators at a circus, after a long yarn, descriptive of what is to be seen inside, generally winds up by saying:—"Step in, gentlemen, step in. Take my word for it, you will be highly delighted when you come out."

"BULLY FOR YOU."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY "DOBBS."

There are many slang phrases we frequently hear
That are used by the old and the young,
And 'though some have a point that is not very clear,
They are part of our national tongue.
We greet some with a laugh, some are slightly profane,
But there's one that is hearty and true.
There's a strength in the saying that leaves not a stain,
'Tis that old one of "Bully for You."

You may talk of refinement—fine fault if you will,
And say that the phrase is absurd;
Declare it is vulgar, that no good it instills;
That it should not be uttered or heard.
But when we've accomplished a difficult task,
And all done the best we could do,
With a slap on the back, what is better, I ask,
Than the greeting of "Bully for You!"

Can I ever forget in the midst of the fight,
When the foe we had chased from the ground,
And when we encamped through that long, dreary night,
With the dead and the wounded around!
One form did we miss from the bivouac mess—
One poor, dying comrade in blue.
"Did you whip them?" he cried, and we answer'd him "Yes,"
He fell back with a "Bully for You!"

SAWDUST.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY CHARLES H. DAY.

One of the most touching Christmas stories penned by Charles Dickens was "Hard Times," many of the characters therein being "in the profession" and members of Sleary's Circus Company. It appears that this Sleary had much of the shrewdness of some of our latter day managers, who disguise the name of circus by the title of "Aggregation," "Hippotheatron," "Equestrian Institute," or "Zoolohippozonomadon," and floated a flag from his wooden temple advertising "Sleary's Horse-ridings."

There are many Gradgrinds to-day who assume to look in scorn upon the circus and amusements of all kinds, who, reflecting no rays of sunshine themselves, throw dark shadows over all with whom they come in contact. Thomas Gradgrind was an eminently practical man, and when he caught his children, with the curiosity of youth, peeping through the boarding of "Sleary's horse-riding" at the graceful equestrian Tyrolean flower act of Miss Josephine Sleary, he looked upon them as already half past redemption, and reprimanded them severely that they should have exhibited so much interest in the circle of the circus while the circle of mathematics and sciences were open to them.

"I was tired, father; I have been tired a long time," replied his daughter. And it was no wonder, she had been crammed with facts like an encyclopedia; to be "a cow was a graminivorous, ruminating quadruped, with several stomachs," and the world a combination of conchological, metalurgical and mineralogical substances.

But Dickens takes a sweet revenge on the image of his father, and Thomas Gradgrind, as the romance went, lived to see his heir a clown in Sleary's show. He was not a jolly fellow though, but a hang dog chap, and not the least way funny, which must have been more aggravating still to his paternal parent.

Sleary's tall writer was as eloquent as Guilford, Hughes, or Crum, and delved as deep into the dictionary to unearth words in which to express the immensity of his attraction. The "nine oils" of E. W. B. Childers, "the Wild Huntsman of the North American Prairies," would not heal the bruises that the school boys now-a-day receive while attempting the feats that they see portrayed in many brilliant colors on the mammoth posters, and forgetting the bright examples of the historic page before them, burn not to be a Washington, Jefferson or Adams, but the hero of the motley—a clown.

It is a serious thing to be a clown and be funny. This poor Sissy Jupe knew to her sorrow, for her father got old and his jokes were threadbare and time-worn, like himself; the people no longer laughed and applauded with delight, and one night, when the audience "goosed him," he went away and left the little circus rider alone in the world. When she was questioned about her father she recollected how he came home and cried as if his heart would break because he was no longer funny; and Sissy Jupe always spoke the awful word "clown" in a whisper.

Some of the profession are, perhaps, as improvident to-day as was Jupe, the clown, and, when time creeps on, will share his fate by losing the favor of those rotes once applauded to the echo. Others invest their surplus that they may enjoy old age or a rainy day out of their own treasure.

Jupe was a clown "in the sere and yellow leaf," whose best days were gone and passed forever, and Tom Gradgrind a sour, ill-natured clown; neither of them in the least like the clown of which I am going to write.

There is not a happier or jollier fellow that dons the spangles and the motley than Billy Burke, the clown of James Robinson's circus. William is a russett blonde, fair to look upon, and a great admirer of the fair sex. Alas! how many fond hearts of maidens fair bleed for him. But, like the roving sailor, in each new conquest he forgets the old. While eating supper one evening, appeasing a hearty appetite, created by the exercise in the ring during the afternoon, he was handed a note by the waiter, and, breaking the seal of the monogramed and perfumed envelope, he read:—

"I gazed upon your manly form for the first time to-day. You are a stranger and you know me not, but I cannot tell you how deeply, how wildly, how madly I love you. I feel that I must see you to know you, and with my own lips tell you how I pine for thee. I will see you to-night, after the performance. Await me at the door of the tent, and under the blue canopy of heaven, and naught but the moon and the twinkling stars shining down upon us, we will pass the hours away, our two souls melting into one. Your own, but unknown darling, MATILDA."

The clown suddenly lost his appetite; his curiosity was aroused, and he longed to meet his strange admirer. To him that night's performance seemed to drag tediously, and in his absence of mind he came near repeating the self-same "gags" several times. Before the last act was finished in the ring, Burke was at the tent door, waiting for the love-lorn one. As the audience passed out he saw coming toward him a woman as fair as he had ever looked upon, and dressed with elegance and taste.

She smiled a recognition and gave her arm in silence and they walked away from the town, down to where the pearly brooks that poets write of sing their way to swell the river. Thus far neither broke the stillness of the evening time, and they sat themselves down on a mossy knoll, just where the moonbeams stole their way amid the branches of a giant oak.

None but a listener of the tales of love they told could divulge their sweet converse, and the clown was just picturing years of future wedded bliss, when there came a heavy crash through the brush and the towering form of a man stood boldly forth in the moonlight.

The fair Matilde gave a shriek and exclaimed:—"My husband!"

Up sprang the clown, and, with one bound, he sped away, but closely pursued by the enraged husband of the romantic wife.

For a few moments the clown had the advantage, but at last the pursuer, who was fleet of foot, gained perceptibly. Their course lay toward the town, and Burke found himself confronted by a brook of considerable depth and width, but he stopped not; as he neared the edge he gathered himself for one mighty effort and shot upward—throwing a somersault in the air from the force of habit—and landed on the opposite bank, high and dry.

The pursuing and irate husband stood appalled, not daring to make so terrific a jump for fear of landing in the middle of the stream: seeing which, the clown and wag as well, cried out:—

"You can't do that, my friend, so don't try it. Give my love to Matilde, and tell her my advice is never to write love letters to circus clowns."

In the grey of the morn, outside of the town, Billy Burke crawled on to the pole wagon and rode to the next stand, closely inspecting every approaching team, fearing that it might contain the husband of the epistolatory and indiscreet Matilde.

If Matilde sighed for Burke, the heart of the clown underwent no pangs for his hasty parting from her; his recollections of the event are more ludicrous than otherwise, and he is as susceptible as ever to the melting glances of the beauties who admiringly watch his capers-lings in THE SAWDUST.

THE GIPSY DANCE.—A strolling band of gipsies, who made their way to Madrid from their savory haunts afar among the orange groves and Moorish ruins of Andalusia, are thus described. They have pitched their tents just outside the Arch of Carlos III, in the vicinity of the bull-shambles, and are now fixed for at least and at most a fortnight. They came to town with one eye to business and the other to thieving. But very picturesque and comely are they here and everywhere, singing and dancing and sitting among the rocks. They are men and women—children in plenty, too, but they are left at home, wherever that may be. The men are habited in breeks, shirts, jackets, leggings, sashes and round pork-pie hats, all of brilliant tints; the women in kirties, waists, gay shawls, and showy stockings, with their black, glossy tresses thrown back and decked with a bright ribbon or flower. The men have guitars and mandolins, the women castanets, which they rattle bravely. They are about to tread the many measures of the dance in concert. Away starts the wild air of the guitar and castinet. Quick as lightning the women, brown and beautiful, catch up their skirts between thumb and forefinger and bound into a waltzing action sideways without turning. Those of the men who have not instruments, caught by infection, spring forward and join the women in the same wild movement. Clang go the guitars and mandolins, click the castanets. Swaying, stooping, gracefully keeping time with head and body, twisting, ogling, making faces at each other, gliding coquettishly out of reach, whirling, dodging, now gently, now fiercely, with here hate, there fondness, and always the delicious rhythm of motion and music in it, these wild, handsome people, personate all the mad infatuation of passion in its very fruition. It is the terrible Tarantula, the spider-dance, full of subtle poison to the sense.

NEVER trust a secret with a married man that loves his wife, for he will tell her, and she will tell Aunt Hannah, and Aunt Hannah will impart it as a profound secret to all her female relatives and acquaintances.

MARS.—Section 21, chapter 209, of the laws of the second session of the Thirty-seventh Congress, approved July 17th, 1862, reads as follows: And be it further enacted, That any alien of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who has enlisted or shall enlist in the armies of the United States, either in the regular or volunteer forces, and has been or shall be hereafter honorably discharged, may be admitted to become a citizen of the United States, upon his own petition, without any previous declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and that he shall not be required to prove more than one year's residence within the United States previous to his application to become such citizen; and that the court admitting such alien shall, in addition to such proof of residence as may by law be required, be satisfied by competent proof of such person having been honorably discharged from the service of the United States as aforesaid.

MAGNOLIA, BILLIARD HALL, Oshkosh, Wis.—1. The highest number to be made by play, regardless of holding, in a four handed game of cribbage, that we know of or can find on record, is eighty-five, each player having a tray, four, seven and five, play-ed in the following manner:—4, 4, 3, 3, 3, 3, 7, 7, 7, 7, 5, 5, 5, 5, 5. By running the cards over as above, you will see that there are four pairs, four pairs-royal, four double pairs royal, three aces, and one fifteen; making 50 points for one side and 35 for the other, or 85 in all. 2. The highest pegging hand could be four aces, providing the party holding them had the last play, and the other three cried a go at twenty seven, as he would make two for a pair, six for pair-royal, twelve for double pair royal, and two for thirty-one, or twenty-six in all.

ENQUIRER, Brooklyn.—The president cannot issue a legal call for a special meeting except by the request of five clubs of the association, and no rule of the game can be changed at any but the annual meeting of the convention. This law governs both the professional and amateur associations. Were such meetings as you propose to take place, any change that might be made in the rules would be illegal, and consequently void. Admitting, as McBride says, you can get a number to agree to prohibit or allow of any special style of play, but not in regular association meeting.

C. A. D., Lowell, Mass.—1. When exactly "thirty-one" is made and "thirty-one" may be scored therefor in cribbage, one for last card don't then come in. 2. Just so; but as the fraud walked off with $95 and the boots for which he gave a valueless $100 bill, why, of course, he made said $95 and boots, consequently that amount which the dealer lost. Many Yes. 5 is not involved in the question, being introduced merely to make confusion with a simple proposition.

MAGNIFICENT SHOO FLY.—1. Dexter and Goldsmith Maid trotted for a purse at Fleetwood, N. Y. May 16th, 1867, the former winning. Dexter was then owned by Mr. George A. Fawcett. 2. We have no means of knowing.

D. P.—The statement which has appeared in the newspapers to the effect that John McDevitt, the billiard expert, was alive and residing at Boise City, Idaho, is denied by a telegraphic dispatch from that place.

HAMLET, New Orleans, La.—The gentleman referred to has a marked German accent. His father was a German and his mother an English woman.

W. J., Cumberland, Md.—Hall shows pay no U. S. license, but only city, and in some cases a county license. Mr. Mellin, which are procured from the city or town clerk.

W. B. G., Providence, R. I.—You had better abandon all idea of it. Many persons of years of experience have failed to make rendition pay.

CONSTANT READER, Richmond, Va.—1. We believe Junius Brutus Booth, Sr., married in England. 2. Junius Brutus Booth, Jr., was born in Charleston, S. C., 1821.

DETROIT, Niles, Mich.—The mistake as to the deal cannot be rectified after the trump card is turned. You should have looked out for yourself.

FOX, Reading, Pa.—There is no way except by engaging yourself to some good trainer as stableman or helper, and working your way gradually up.

AMIGO, Trinidad, Col.—If the horse fell after passing the winning post, the dam's mare, as the race had finished when the horse had passed the post.

WALTER F., Marietta.—The committee having decided that Mc-Clure was entitled to the office mentioned, the man who bet upon the election wins, of course.

J. A. H., East Birmingham.—We cannot comply with your request. Address a letter to the "Secretary of the Schuylkill Navy," in our care.

HARRISON ROOSTER, Hartford, Conn.—J. K. Emmet performed upon the minstrel stage for some years prior to his debut on the dramatic stage.

H. W., Phila.—Heenan did knock King out of time in their fight at Wadhurst, Eng., but no claim was made for the former, and, after resuming, King beat him.

EXETER.—1. That is entirely a matter of opinion. 2. If you will mention the distance, and whether a four, six, or eight oared crew, we can inform you.

J. W., Staten Island.—Any person born on the American continents is an American, but the term is more usually applied to natives of the United States.

TYRO, Buffalo, N. Y.—1. Lack of space. 2. That was the lady's maiden name. She is married to a gentleman residing in Albany, N. Y.

OPERA, Baltimore.—The reason is, the troupe have met with such nauseating flattery they cannot stand the close criticisms we have given them without squirming. Hence their petty meanness.

BOSTON.—1. Never having seen it stated, we cannot inform you. 2. With the lungs inflated, usually.

J. D. G., Monroe City, Iowa.—1. Use curling irons and castile soap. 2. Handwriting fair.

CAPT. F. N. M.—1. There are several claimants, and we are unable to decide. 2. None. 3. The Athletics has it right.

W. C. H.—Hatfield claims to have thrown 132 yards is the longest on record, and we think he is right.

BIG INJUN, Vicksburg.—The fastest one mile time, running, is 1.43, made by both Fallansen and Hendricks.

E. D. R., Pecin City.—1. He is said to raise good fowls. 2. Yes. You can obtain the book from Ed. James.

L. O., Cincinnati.—The ace, deuce, tray, four and five, form a sequence.

BILLY P. H.—The Atlantic in '67, and the Athletic in '68, were the best.

TURF, Montreal.—At Boston the final throw is decisive, and, as it did not beat 7, only throwing 5, he wins the bet.

JOHN L. Jersey City.—A betting bet that he can beat any person in the room, and his lump being hit by one, loses.

J. W.—The colored citizens of New York celebrated the passage of the Fifteenth Amendment on March 30th, last year.

"JEAN."—Thank you; will appear anon. 2. The gentleman referred to is not related to Miss Laura Keene.

MAURICE, Providence, R. I.—We never answer questions concerning the domestic affairs of professional persons.

EMON FAMOS, Pittsburgh.—The is an old friend in a new garb—the shoemaker loses $15 and the boots.

C. P. L., Phila.—See "varieties" department next week. Shall be pleased to act as advertising agent for offer, at your convenience.

J. W. M., Canal Fulton.—Bill Lang ran one mile, part down hill, in 4 min. 2 sec., at Newmarket, Eng.

FINANCIAL.—It depends entirely upon the arrangements you make or the bargain you enter into with the owner.

CHAS. COCHELL.—1. We shall be pleased to receive items of news. 2. Money pays for two insertions.

J. M. C., Phila.—Violent exercise, or anything inducing excitement, should be avoided for a short time after partaking of food.

AMATEUR OARSMAN, Hoboken.—Ed. James, who advertises, can supply you.

HARLETON, Pa.—Not being in the political arena, we are unable to answer your question.

CONSTANT READER, Indianapolis, Ind.—A. T. Stewart's retail store is located on Broadway, Tenth street and Fourth avenue.

SUBSCRIBER, Williamsetown.—You can get passes from members of the committees on the boards of managers.

J. M. M., Youngstown, O.—Joe Jefferson's version of "Rip Van Winkle" was an old one, re-written by Dion Boucicault.

FELIX.—Shannon, Miller & Crane, who advertise, can supply you.

W. H. M., Wilmington, O.—Those songs are all original with the CLIPPER, and published before music is composed for them.

SAM STRATA YANKEE.—That line of business would not pay you for the loss of time and trouble.

YOUNGFELLOW.—You are wrong. The scale is feather, light, middle and heavy weight.

J. M., Pittston, Pa.—No, not unless he is a felon.

HANK DARLEY.—Accepted for early insertion.

"DORSE."—Received "Behind the Scenes."

MARIA, Canton, O.—Fifty dollars.

LET LOOSE.—The decision of the Court of Appeals that our Court of Special Sessions, when only one judge is on the bench, is illegal, has created a great stir among parties convicted during the last year or two, and efforts are being made, under this ruling, to set free hundreds of criminals now serving out their sentences in prison. This is to be regretted, for the city is already thronged with dangerous characters, and this threatened jail delivery will but add to our jeopardy. If, however, parties convicted of offences should be released, they certainly may be re-arrested and tried in a court which is legal. Furthermore, if these convictions are all illegal, then it follows that the acquittals are also illegal, and parties so acquitted may be arrested and tried the same as if they had never been tried." If the ruling is good in one case, it is in the other. What the effect of this Albany ruling is to be, cannot be guessed at, but that it is calculated to make a burlesque of our courts and their officers, is very certain. It promises to make a harvest time for certain shysters.

WHERE'S WILLIS?—Soon after the death of Jas. Fisk, Jr., the Rev. J. S. Willis, of the Seventeenth Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of this city, made the character and peculiarities of the deceased the subject of a sermon which, for ill-timed, ungenerous, uncharitable, unchristianlike comments, reflected anything but credit upon the preacher or his calling. Since that time several ministers of the gospel have been detected in criminal practices, not only with lady members of their congregations, but in one instance with little school girls; but the Reverend Willis has had nothing to say about these ministerial black sheep. On the 3d inst. the Rev. Myram D. Wood, for seduction at Atlanta, Georgia, was sentenced to ten years imprisonment in the penitentiary. Here then is a profitable field for our Seventeenth street pastor to work in. As he went out of his course to make an assault on a dead man, surely he cannot object to give us a sermon on these living subjects, these lustful hypocrites who wear the garb of heaven to serve the devil in. Let the Rev. Willis tar his pious brethren with the same brush that he used to blacken the character of Fisk, Jr.

SEEING THE SHOW.

The tenting season has fairly commenced, a number of circus companies being already on their winding way for the campaign of 1872. In accordance with our usual custom at the beginning of the tenting show season, we this week present our annual list of companies, with the names of their proprietors, managers, performers and officials duly set forth, together with a record of the most important features of the various exhibitions. The circus and its attendant satellites are always welcome visitors, not only to our friends in the rural districts, but to the denizens of large cities as well. Unless a man has had some experience in the circus business it is a risky venture to engage in, as thousands have discovered to their discontent. If all things are propitious—if times are good, and weather favorable—a good circus will insure its owners a large income for his outlay; if, on the other hand, money should be scarce and storms prevail, then, indeed, uneasy lies the head that wears a managerial crown, for the expenses of running a first-class concern are in some cases as high as two and three thousand dollars per day. When a "stormy cycle" strikes a show, following it for days, and sometimes for weeks at a time, as if in pursuit of some disreputable Jonah, preventing the people from turning out in honor of the advent of the circus and its merry men, then it is that a manager's patience is sorely tried; then it is that he sees the earnings of years swept away in one short season, never, perhaps, to be recovered. This is not unfrequently the case.

The circus manager is up to all the "tricks of the trade" to make his speculation a success, to bring it prominently before the public and to have it written about in the papers. You frequently read of "hairbreadth escapes from wild and untamable animals;" about the destructive prochivities of ponderous elephants, whose immense strength enables them to "sweep down trees and every green thing that seeks to obstruct their passage;" you read about roaring lions escaping from their iron clad dens and seeking whom they may devour in their wild career; you see flaming accounts of battles royal between lions and tigers and other ferocious beasts, requiring the united efforts of a regiment of men and a park of artillery to curb the angry strife and prevail upon the contestants to lie down together in peace. Most of these fearful revelations are made when the season is about opening or soon after the show has started on its travels. The majority of these awful disclosures are the invention of some wide awake manager or his agent, who desire to "work up" a good case for the concern, and have it talked about and copied into the country papers as a flyer. This "sensation" business seems to be growing. There have been, during the past few years, so many absurd stories fulminated by showmen in regard to the escape of their beasts, and the terrible havoc occasioned thereby, that the public are becoming somewhat incredulous; and managers would do well hereafter to assist in putting an end to such absurdities. Mr. Geo. J. Guilford, press agent of Jas. Robinson's Circus, probably sees it in this light, for he writes to us that on the night of April 1st (fatal day) a guinea pig belonging to that exhibition escaped from its confinement at St. Louis, tore down a row of stone front houses, drank up a barrel of petroleum spirits, and killed three horses; it was finally destroyed by a park of artillery, manned by a detachment from Jefferson Barracks, who hastened to St. Louis in answer to a dispatch from the terrified citizens.

But these sensation accounts are not all false alarms, we are sorry to say, as witness the recent horrible death of Macarthy, the lion tamer, in England, an account of which will be found on another page; and still later, the fearful end of Joseph Whittle, the beast trainer connected with O'Brien's Circus, who was attacked in a den of lions at Philadelphia, on the 2d inst., and died of the injuries received on the following day, the details of which we have given in this week's circus department. Such calamities are of not very frequent occurrence, however; assaults are made by beasts on their trainers nearly every season, but rarely such as result fatally, as in the two instances referred to. The more dangerous a performance is, the more desire is there to witness it, and the savage beast that killed poor Whittle will now, no doubt, be a greater object of curiosity than heretofore, wherever O'Brien' concern appears.

We trust that the season may be propitious for a good campaign, so that all hands may return to winter quarters, at the close of the term, invigorated in health as well as strengthened in the sinews which they depend upon to pull through a season of inactivity. There is a very large capital invested in the circus business the present season, for nearly all companies have been made complete in every detail, and expenses incurred now which were never thought of before. We have heard that great excitement exists just now among managers owing to a report that one large concern is going to exhibit at the low tariff of twenty-five cents, which may compel others to do the same. With the immense outlay incurred, we cannot see how managers are to make both ends meet for less than fifty cents admission.

NEWS OF THE WEEK BOILED DOWN.

☞ A curious case was investigated by Coroner Young, in this city, on April 3d. On Aug. 26th, 1869, Frederick Joseph Siegfried, aged 6½, died at the house of Frederick Heggi, a German machinist, under rather suspicious circumstances. Frederick Siegfried, the son of the deceased, on certain facts coming to his knowledge, caused the body to be exhumed and examined. It was buried nearly two years and six months after death, and a large quantity of arsenic found. Heggi was arrested and committed for examination.

☞ Advices dated City of Mexico, April 1st, report that affairs in the republic are more chaotic than ever. The wife of United States Minister Nelson died of heart disease on March 23d. A railroad train was robbed of several thousands of dollars on March 30th. The Lower California difficulty has been settled by the government conceding the privilege of gathering orchilla. A shock of earthquake was felt in several states on March 28th.

☞ The proprietor of a road house on the Cahoos road, near Troy, was burned down on April 1st, carrying with it a number of men and boys. The broken timbers took fire and it was with difficulty that the breaker was saved from destruction. Two men and a boy were fatally injured, and a miner named Rosser was killed by a fall of coal.

☞ Advices from Brownsville, dated April 4th, state that Mexican bandiiti continue to steal cattle from Texas, but United States cavalry is expected to soon relieve them from the protection of the border. Judge Russell, of the District Court, has decided that Gov. Davis had no power to remove the district attorney and appoint a new one.

☞ The case of the state of Virginia vs. W. H. Barrett, of the firm of S. H. MORSE, Professor Samuel Finley Breese.—Born in Charlestown, Mass., April 27th, 1791; graduated at Yale in 1810, and in 1811 accompanied Washington Allston to England, to study painting under his tuition and that of Benjamin West. In 1813 he received the gold medal of the Adelphia Society of Arts, at the hands of the Duke of Norfolk, for an original model of a "Dying Hercules," his first attempt at sculpture; returned to the United States in 1815, and in 1824-'25, with some other artists, organized a drawing association, which, after two years struggle against various obstacles, resulted in the establishment of the present National Academy of Design, of which he was elected the first president, and for sixteen years subsequently was continued in that office; visited Europe a second time in 1829 to complete his art studies, and resided for more than three years in the principal cities of the Continent; in 1826-'27, Prof. S. Freeman Dana had been his colleague in the rostrum during his lectures on art at the New York Athenæum, the latter lecturing on electro-magnetism. In conversation with Prof. Dana the subject of electro-magnetism was made familiar to the future electrician. The electro-magnet on Sturgeon's principle (the first ever shown in the United States), was exhibited and explained in Dana's lectures and later was presented to Prof. Morse by Prof. Torrey. Dana suggested, by his spiral volute coil, the electro-magnet of the present day. This was the nearest to Morse when Morse returned from Europe, and it is now used in every Morse telegraph throughout the world. Morse embarked in 1832 at Havre on board the packet ship Sully, and in a casual conversation with some of the passengers on the recent discovery in France of the means of obtaining the electric spark from the magnet, showing the identity or relation of electricity and magnetism, Morse's mind conceived, not merely the idea of an electric telegraph, but of an electro-magnetic and chemical recording telegraph substantially and essentially as it now exists. The testimony of Dr. Finley, of Princeton, and most eminent physicians of Detroit—Detroit, Mich., April 5th.

PENNINGTON, W. O.—An old citizen and prominent politician of Little Rock—Little Rock, Ark., April 3d.

RIPLEY, Hon. Edward Ireland.—Formerly State Senator and Representative in the Virginia Legislature, and a distinguished resident of Burlington—Burlington, Iowa, March 30th, aged 81.

SCHWARTZ, Col. Adolph.—Engaged in the German war of 1848, and at its close came to this country, afterwards took an active part in the war in Nicaragua with Gen. Walker; at the breaking out of the late war went to St. Louis, and organized a battery which distinguished itself in various engagements, known as the Second Illinois Light Artillery, and was first engaged at the battle of Belmont; wounded at Pittsburg Landing; went to Springfield, Ill., after the war, where he followed his profession as an architect, and in 1868 removed to Staten Island—died suddenly, Staten Island, N. Y., March 22d.

ZUVER, William J.—A veteran of the war of 1812—Pleasantville, Pa., April 2d, aged 79.

THE RING.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP MUDDLE.

NO STAKEHOLDER YET.

No answer was received by Mace to the communication sent on April 1st to Alderman McMullen, of Philadelphia, asking whether or not he would be responsible for the stakes if Jim agreed to accept the nominee of O'Baldwin for the office of final stakeholder probably because that gentleman was so busily occupied with matters connected with the late grand terpsichorean festival of the Moyamensing Hose Association that he could not attend to it. Nothing was left to be done, therefore, but to proceed to Long Branch, 9 A. M., there to hold a personal interview, according to appointment, on the afternoon of the 5th inst., Ned having telegraphed to Johnny Dwyer that he would be there. Mace left Jersey City for that place by the 8 A. M. train, accompanied by a number of his friends, among whom were Jack Harper, Billy Edwards and Dooney Harris, arriving there after an hour's ride and proceeding at once to the "Old House at Home." A jovial Joe Carelese Market street smuggery, the property of which was on the lookout for the latic heroes and extended a hearty welcome, speedily moistened with the extract of malt. While they were enjoying their breakfast in the homelike dining-room in the rear, they were joined by the broad-shouldered Brooklynite, Johnny Dwyer, who came in the interest of "the big fellow," as he calls Ned, though not authorized to do anything more than he had already done. A few minutes later Ed. James, the temporary custodian of the money, arrived, with our reporter, these being the only New Yorkers present. At half past nine Mace and Dwyer sat down to breakfast, at which time Dwyer informed Mace that Jim had no objection to the articles signed by O'Baldwin, and stating that he had left West Philadelphia at 1.30. As it would necessarily be nigh six o'clock before he could reach Paterson, the party, after partaking of a few more refreshments, decided to take a walk about town, visiting some of the other resorts of that lively New Jersey town, running across Jim Collins on the way, he having been called to the death-bed of his mother, who died about half-past six o'clock, only a few hours before the arrival of the Giant; but they were doomed to disappointment, for though the telegram stated that he was on his way, he failed to appear at the appointed time, and Mace and party returned to Jersey City for that purpose, Phil Hargrave, Billy Edwards and Dooney Harris, arriving there after an hour's ride and proceeding at once to the "Old House at Home." A jovial Joe Carelese Market street smuggery, the property of which was on the lookout for the latic heroes and extended a hearty welcome, speedily moistened with the extract of malt. BILLIARDS.

COON VS. PARKER.—A MATCH FOR $50 A SIDE.—At the billiard room corner of Green and Randolph streets, Chicago, on the 3d inst., there was a contest at French carome between John W. Coon and Frank Parker, the latter of whom was, about a year ago, champion player at the four-ball game. It was one of the closest contests on record, and from first to last a well played game. The number of points was 200, and at one time the game was 123 to 127 in Coon's favor. Parker, however, pulled through, and was declared winner by two points. The score:—

Parker—20, 15, 4, 4, 20, 8, 0, 0, 5, 1, 0, 0, 4, 3, 3, 0, 7, 0, 2, 0, 0, 0, 1, 0, 2, 0, 0, 3, 1, 2, 0, 3, 0, 0, 4, 1, 0, 3, 7, 14, 2, 0, 4, 0, 1, 2.—200.

Coon—3, 0, 3, 2, 12, 0, 1, 0, 2, 0, 0, 13, 6, 0, 0, 0, 3, 5, 1, 2, 0, 0, 0, 1, 4, 15, 3, 1, 7, 3, 3, 0, 3, 2, 1, 0, 1, 3, 1, 1, 4, 2, 0, 0, 1, 0, 13, 2.—198.

SUNLIGHT.—CHICAGO, April 3d, 1872.—Match game of French carome, between John W. Coon and Frank Parker, 200 points up, on 9x10 carom table, for $100 Parker, 200; Coon, 198. Average—Parker, 4.8-45; Coon, 4.16-47. Highest runs—Parker, 35, 24, 15, 15, 13, 14; Coon, 57, 28, 13, 13, 12. Referee, Al. Le Brun.

AMATEUR IN THE FIELD.—Having fitted up in elegant style a rare room at No. 7 Barclay street, Mr. George R. Phelan has become again a claimant for the patronage of the billiard community. The gentleman has the advantage of a large experience in this business. Son of the late Mr. Michael Phelan, he was for many years the agent in San Francisco of the firm of Phelan & Collender. Later he became directly interested in that firm, from which he withdrew in 1869 to go abroad. Returning in 1870 he concluded to go into business on his own responsibility, and selected the Pacific Coast as his field of operations. In San Francisco he fitted up what was regarded there as the finest warerooms on this continent, and was just beginning to reap a benefit from his heavy outlay, when the entire block in which his warerooms and manufactory were located was destroyed by fire, involving a loss, in excess of insurance, of $18,000. Called home a few weeks afterwards by the death of his father, he resolved to abandon San Francisco and locate anew at the east. The location he has chosen is one of the best in the city, and he resumes business with the best wishes of all who know him.

DEERY VS. DION.—The challenge of John Deery, of Omaha, forwarded under his authorization by the CLIPPER's correspondent, has as yet met with no response. As will be remembered, Deery wants to play for $250 a side, were called for—the three-ball, 500 points, and the four-ball, 1,000 points—one to be played in Omaha, and the other in this city. It is expected that either of the elder Dions will respond, but neither has seen fit to do so. It would be difficult to explain this silence, unless the two players are waiting to see Deery's signature attached to a challenge. But in these times it would be advisable to "speak upon a pint."

THE CONNECTICUT CHAMPIONSHIP.—Has not Mattie Stowins become neglectful of the billiard interests of that great city which exists upon the right bank of the majestic Connecticut and upon both banks of the turbulent Hog river? Hartford would be all the livelier and feel all the healthier for a match or tournament to decide the Connecticut championship. As champion of the Nutmeg State, Mattie's term expired long ago. Suppose we have a fresh hand, or even Mattie over again—in fact, anything for a game.

THE IVORIES IN WILMINGTON, DEL.—Edmund H. Nelms and Victor Estephe, the well known Philadelphia experts, last week strayed along the banks of the Brandywine, giving an exhibition for the benefit of such of the 30,000 inhabitants of Wilmington as chose to attend. A great many attended, and Nelms was defeated in a four-ball game for $1,000 a side.

GOLDTHWAIT VS. CYRILLE DION.—William Goldthwait intends to leave Troy. It is his further intention to locate in this city the moment a favorable opportunity presents. Should he do so, several of his admirers will pit him against Cyrille Dion, in a four-ball game, for $250 a side.

CORRECTION.—Cyrille Dion has no recollection of having played with Asa Brainard much less having beaten by that gentleman. Our reporter was informed thereof by Asa himself; but it seems that the error was caused by a confusion of names, there being now three Dions in the field.

A BILLIARD PLAYER IN RHODE ISLAND.—Providence, sometimes called Brown University, has at last got hold of a pretty good professional billiard player, in the person of Charles A. Prink, who, until recently, was in charge of the rooms at 243 Broadway, in this city. He is now at Reynolds & Whipley's room.

SMITH IN ATLANTA.—George Smith, whose performances with the cue have attracted uncommon attention, from the fact that he is but eighteen years of age and nevertheless hails from California, has taken charge of a hotel billiard room in Atlanta, Ga. He is a rattler.

A NOBBY CUE.—At Phil. Tieman's room, Cincinnati, they have a champion cue, painted brick red. It is for the worst player. The man who now holds it is to try and get rid of it on the 15th inst.

AN EXHIBITION IN STAMFORD, CONN.—Messrs. Garnier and Daly, and Madame Garnier, are to give an exhibition shortly in the prosperous town which lies at the mouth of Mill river, and furnishes red hot coffee to passengers on eastern trains.

RE-OPENING.—There was a grand time a few nights ago, at Samuel Thompson's, New Haven, the occasion being the re-opening of this well-known room, which is now supplied with Collender's "Bevels."

ON HIS PINS AGAIN.—"Uncle Griff," who, has been reported alarmingly ill, is once more present in the flesh, and as unbending as his angles of yore.

MONS. AND MME. GARNIER, assisted by Maurice Daly, gave exhibitions of their cue-ious skill at Mozart Hall, Cincinnati, on the afternoon and evening of Saturday, 6th.

HOMEWARD BOUND.—Joseph Dion, who has absented himself for nearly six months, is expected in this city in a few days.

GONE UP.—The fixtures of the St. Charles billiard room, Philadelphia, have been sold at auction. "Another landmark gone."

AMERICAN CUSHIONS ABROAD.—The Hotel Chatham, Paris, has ordered cushions from H. W. Collender.

OBITUARY.—The wife of the veteran roomkeeper, Capt. Tom Reeves, died a few days ago.

AQUATICS.

ELLIS WARD VS. A FOUR OAR.—The third and concluding race of the series between Ellis Ward, in a single scull shell, and the crew of the Lucille four oared shell, came off at the Isle of Hope, Savannah, Ga., on April 1st. It proved to be the most interesting race of the series, and it was supposed by many that Ward would be the winner by many seconds—but in the previous races he had not exerted himself, and he would in the last race have a chance of 10 seconds. An immense crowd went out to witness the race. Ward had been out to the island for some days, training, having his headquarters at Buckingham's, the well-known sporting man of those parts, especially in boating matters. The two boats got into position about 4 P. M., and Ward got away first, leading by a half length. The Lucille gradually lessened the distance with their efforts, and were in a boat length ahead. Ward came in at the terminus of the race a half length ahead. Ward had hard work, but he pulled steadily 39 strokes per minute, and came in winner by 8 seconds.

SCHARFF VS. BUTLER.—The match between these men for $500 a side, to row five miles on the Schuylkill river on June 7th, is not as yet creating much interest, the time for its decision being too far distant. Neither have we as yet turned upon a training which will give them ample time to fully prepare themselves. The next deposit, $200 a side, is called for by the articles on May 1st. The boat in which Scharff is to row has been completed. It was built by Espy, of the McKee club, and is said to be exceedingly handsome. It is made of the finest Spanish cedar, is thirty feet six inches long, eleven and a half inches wide and weighs but twenty-three pounds. It is made with a sliding seat.

ROWING MATTERS IN ENGLAND.—A deposit had been put up at Newcastle, for a match between James Percy and James Taylor—respectively of the Renforth and Taylor-Winship crews who visited this country last summer—to row a skiff race from the High Level to Scotswood Suspension Bridge, on the Tyne, for £100 a side, but as it was done without Taylor's knowledge or consent, and he was out of town when the time arrived for drawing up articles, nothing came of it. It was thought likely that a match would be made, however, another meeting having been appointed by Percy. The Tyne regatta has been fixed to take place on July 15th and 19th. J. Anderson, of Hammersmith, wants to row P. Kelly, of Manchester, from Putney to Mortlake, on the Thames, for £25 or £30 a side.

THE NEXT DEPOSIT, $400 a side, in the pair-oared match between Henry Coulter and Lew Cavitt, on the one side, and the Biglin brothers on the other, must be forthcoming on Saturday, April 20th, immediately after the stakes, of which the New York's propose commencing strict training. The Allegheanians have been taking regular breathers on the waters of that section during the past few days and evidently mean to show up in up-top order. Odds will be offered upon them ere the day arrives. May 30th is the date fixed for the race and Philadelphia the place.

THE SINGLE SCULL SHELL, built by Robert Jewett, of England, for J. J. O'Leary, at Worcester, Mass., arrived in Boston by steamer on March 30th, and is reported as being a beauty. It is 30ft. 8in. long, 11¾in. wide, 5¾in. deep, and weighs but 27 lbs. O'Leary anticipates demonstrations of speedy propulsion in the graceful craft.

MARK ADDY and Robert Bagnall are to row a right away scullers' race, from Putney to Mortlake, for £100 a side, on May 4th.

A NEW boat club, called the Emerald, was lately organized at Lawrence, Mass. They posess three new four-oared boats.

WRESTLING.—Jas. McCabe and Jas. Danforth contended in a wrestling match, for $100 a side, best two out of three falls, square holds, at Wixom, Mich., on April 3d, about one hundred and fifty persons being present. Mc Cabe weighed 190lbs. and his opponent 145lbs., the former proving successful. Danforth was troubled with a fever sore on his left leg, which operated greatly to his disadvantage, and as soon as he is rid of it he purposes making a fresh match with his late conqueror.

Julia, Miss. Gordon; Mrs. Banks, Miss Vanderpool; Betty, Miss Callanan. "Retained for the Defence"—Mr. Motley De Windsor, J. A. Earley; Mr. Titewash, A. Gordon; Mr. Fergusson, J. E. Borne; Thwaites, Wm. Frankin; Pawkins, M. McNulty; Agatha De Windsor, Miss Callanan. W. G. TAYLOR, a Chicago gentleman, who is studying the drama, and who, it is said, gives promise of future excellence as a tragedian, was honored by a literary and musical entertainment in the parlors of the Michigan avenue hotel, the Metropolis, on March 19th, an account of which follows:—

W. G. TAYLOR.—A literary and musical soiree, complimentary to Mr. W. G. Taylor, the rising tragedian, was given to that gentleman last evening in the [illegible] parlors of the new Michigan avenue hotel, the Metropolis. A small and discriminating audience was present, including some of our notable lodges of drama and lovers of fine art, among the rest, Mrs. Cowell, the presiding genius of the evening; Lena Edwards, Miss Baxter, Mr. Agnew, Mr. Deary, Messrs. Colbert, Gallagher, Ferris and Tilton, and others of the fifty present and several ladies and gentlemen from the interior of the state. Mr. W. G. Taylor, recipient of the compliment, is well known in the city as a student of drama, and his type, resembling John Wilkes somewhat more than Edwin; a fine, full and easy voice; magnetic eye, and a handsome, variable countenance, as well as the greater gift, the artist's instinct, have been led through the degrees of dramatic study by competent masters. Mrs. Cowell chief among them, who will probably, soon make his debut upon the tragic stage. The oracles are not in his favor, and unless there be no truth in Delphic, he has a brilliant future before him. He read last night a number of the severest sections of Macbeth. Mrs. Cowell reading the part of Lady Macbeth, and in voice, inflection, facial expression and gesture, displayed a study and harmonious conception of the character of Duncan's assassin. His vocal volume was inharmonious with a personation of Macbeth, and this detracted little from his merits since, although obvious in a parlor, where no attempt was made at dramatic surroundings, it is easily avoidable on a stage. His reading of later in the evening, of Poe's "Raven," a plaintive poem, in the higher portions of which the narrative, Mr. Taylor's manner was too hearty, and he was at fault somewhat, while in the lower passages tone and inflection as demanded by the author's thought. But he presented the picture of the saintly dog and his fallen, hopeless and good-natured master, with artistic vividness. His success was a matter of just pride to his many friends, and, if forensic fluency, his studious habits, ambition and great ability, will certainly prove their reward in time to come. The music of the evening was exceedingly enjoyable. Miss Jennie Boucher, in full and sympathetic contralto, sang several solos and a new duet of Deary's, an excellent composition, with the author, who was in good voice and sang with great spirit, and Miss Hostetter gave Torrey's "Butterfly" with exquisite sweetness and delicacy, accuracy which were the more admirable when we consider her youth and the difficulties of the composition. The thoughtful host of the Metropolis, Mr. William Colbert, laid before the company a delicious supper, from whose quality the merits of the Metropolis received unanimous judgment.—Chicago Sun Post, March 23d.

A pleasant social party gathered together in the parlors of the Metropolis hotel on last evening, the occasion being a literary and musical entertainment in honor of Mr. W. G. Taylor, an amateur elocutionist of this city. The greater number of those present were the personal friends of Mr. Taylor and those who assisted him in his readings. The well selected programme began with Blake's duet, "The Sailor's Sigh," which was excellently sung by Miss Emma Baxter and Mr. Gustavus Deary. Miss Baxter is a charming amateur soprano, not entirely unknown to the Chicago public, followed with "La Farfaletta," a florid aria demanding unusual flexibility of voice and capacity of lungs for its successful execution. The young lady's singing was a pleasant surprise to those who had heard her before, as it has improved in many respects during her last public appearance. Mrs. Anna Cowell and Mr. Taylor then read selections from "Macbeth." The portions of the tragedy selected were the scenes immediately preceding and succeeding the murder of Duncan, which portray the varied passions of the fiendish usurper, and are the most exacting in their demands upon the dramatic resources of the reader. It is unnecessary to allude to Mrs. Cowell's rendering of the lines of Lady Macbeth. There are few in Chicago who do not fully appreciate her in that connection. Mr. Taylor's reading and facial expression acted even his microphone. His every word and gesture had an unmistakable meaning in it. This was especially noticeable in the dagger soliloquy, the rendition of which was strikingly original, both in voice and action. Mr. Geary sang a petty ballad composition of his own, and Miss Baxter sang "Kathleen Mavourneen," and then Mr. Taylor read again. The selection this time was Trowbridge's well known poetical sketch, "The Vagabonds," which to be at all understandable must be read tragically, pathetically and comically, as occasion requires, and he accompanied with corresponding action. Mr. Taylor's reading was really excellent, and his actions illustrative in the extreme. The reading portion of the programme was closed by Mrs. Cowell, who rendered "The Pauper," from "Pleasures of Hope," with power and pathos. More music followed, and then came an elegant supper, served under the personal supervision of Mr. Cox, the gentlemanly host of the Metropolis, and in the best style of that excellent hotel. The remainder of the evening was spent in social conversation. It is understood that Mr. Taylor intends adopting the stage as a profession, and will make his debut at an early day. There is no reason why he should not become an actor of unusual excellence, as he possesses all the attributes of voice, form and feature. For the development of the first he is indebted to Mrs. Cowell, whose successful career on the stage eminently qualifies her for the position of mentor to the aspiring elocutionist.—Chicago Times, March 20th.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

Dramatic.

FROM LONDON, Eng., we are in the receipt of advices concerning amusements there and elsewhere up to March 24th. At Drury Lane, on March 11th, for the benefit of the Yokes family, "Black Eyed Susan was performed. Mr. Dewar appeared as William; Mr. L. Brough, Jacob Twig; Mr. F. Yokes, Gnatbrain, and Miss Yokes, Susan. The Christy Minstrels gave some portion of their famous entertainment. The burlesques of "Tom Thumb" and "The Belles of the Kitchen" were also enacted. At the Globe, Mr. Albery's comedy of "Forgiven," it is said, has undergone much change and curtailment. At the first representation the action was sadly impeded, the obstacles are now removed, and the humor of the language and the interest of the story can assert themselves. Before the comedy, a farce by Mr. Beeher, entitled "A Poetic Proposal" was played, which is thus spoken of:—"It deals with the adventures of an amorous blacking manufacturer, who, to win the heart of an obdurate lady, employs the poet in his keeps on the establishment to write for him a poetic proposal. Though it fails to win the lady he seeks, this or the riches of the suitor, and a sense of her own forlorn situation, wins the heart of her friend. The blacking manager proving willing, a match is made, and the heroine, who has escaped an honor she did not seek, is made happy with her first love." At the Court Theatre a two act domestic comedy, by J. Daly, Rosemeres, entitled "Somebody's Love," was produced on March 18th. It is spoken of as follows:—"The new piece is slight and unpretentious, using pleasantly, and, in the main, effectively, materials that have been frequently employed. That it met with a dubious reception from the audience must be attributed to want of experience on the part of the author, who has encumbered his slight framework with needless matter. One long speech in the first act, delivered by one of the characters, who enters and with scarcely a word of preparation, commences a history of his past life, which he delivers with his hat in his hand, standing, may be advanced as a curious instance of mismanagement and want of tact. Its story is nothing more than the development of the love felt for one Jasper Homestead for Katherine Gresham. While the girl is in affluent circumstances a sense of the difference that separates her from him drives Jasper into reckless courses. A turn in fortune's wheel draws her into poverty and lifts him into competence. Love then works out her redemption and the pair are made happy. An aristocratic rival forms the villain of the piece, no very black-hearted type of a villain after all. Some amusing scenes, in which a refined apothecary wins the favor of his wife's guardians, whom her marriage has estranged, form the underplot." At the Standard, a new comedietta by Mr. J. T. Douglas, entitled "Brave as a Lion," had been successfully produced. It is spoken of as being "short, sharp and crisp." The cleverly contrived plot relates to the misfortunes that befall a quiet and peace-loving husband being mistaken by his wife's father for one of those fire-eating and blood-thirsty gentlemen who are too apt to seek redress for a supposed wrong in duelling. A letter addressed to his wife by an admirer of his sister's falls into the hands of his father-in-law, an old soldier of the ancien regime, who misconstrues its contents, and the hero, Mr. Potts, is called upon by him to fight this gentleman. Two other individuals aspire to the hand of the young lady, and Potts finds himself so badgered by the trio that he suddenly becomes roused and appears "as brave as a lion." Mrs. Potts, however, who loves her husband, sets matters right by extracting an apology from each of the would be duellists, the sister in the meantime being given to her first lover. There are two or three capital situations in the piece, which evidently highly pleased the audience, who laughed incessantly at the various subterfuges Mr. Petto had recourse to to prove that he is not so brave as his wife has made him out.....Sadler's wells was announced to open at Easter under the management of Mr. George Owen.....F. R. Chatterton's benefit of Drury Lane was announced for March 25th, when the following attractions were to have been presented:—Mr. Benjamin Webster and Miss Furtado in "One Touch of Nature," Mr. Phelps, as Sir Pertinax McSycophant, in the third act of "The Man of the World." Mr. Fechter, as Hamlet, second act. Mr. J. B. Buckstone, Mr. Everill and Miss Wilford in "Box and Cox." Mr. J. L. Toole, Messrs. W. Rignold, Sydney, Dewey, Dalton and Miss Florence Farren in the "Spitalfields Weaver." The Yokes Family in the farce of "The Belles of the Kitchen." The Christy Minstrels will commence the performance with a selection of their celebrated entertainment, and the ballet scene of the grand pantomime of "Tom Thumb" will terminate the performance.....The Haymarket, which closed for a short time, was to have re-opened on Easter, with the "Ballet of Comfort," "Pygmalion and Galatea," and H. J. Byron's extravaganza entitled "Princess Springtime; or, The Envoy Who Stole the King's Daughter." On April 6th, a benefit performance was announced for the widow and children of the late Hamilton Hume.....The Surrey Theatre and all the scenery and effects are to be put up by auction in May, unless it is previously bought by private contract.

AN AGREEMENT has just been signed between M. Perrin, the manager of the Comedie Francaise, of Paris, France, and M. Raphael Felix, of the St. James' Theatre. In consequence of this arrangement the artists of the Theatre Francaise are to visit London next July, and to play all their most favorite pieces. The whole troupe numbers no less than 86 members. M. Raphael Felix engages to pay for the series of representations £4,840, besides all expenses of every description.....No changes had occurred at any of the other theatres.

WALTER H. FRIMES and Miss Lottie Venne were married at Nottingham, Eng., March 20th.

BARRY SULLIVAN acted at Bristol, Eng., during the week ending March 23d.

MISS KATE BATEMAN, on account of inflamation of the eyes, has been compelled to postpone all her professional engagements for the present.

MR. AND MRS. DION BOUCICAULT acted during the week ending March 23d, at Edinburgh, Scotland.

Musical.

THE SEASON OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA WAS announced to commence at Covent Garden, London, Eng., on March 30th, with "Faust," with the principals cast as follows:—Marcherita, M'lle Sessi; Siebel, M'lle Scalchi; Martha, M'lle Anesi; Mefistofele, M. Faure; Valentino, Signor Cotogni; Wagner, Signor Rinaldini; Nicolini and Signor Bettini. The subscription will consist of forty nights, and the prices for that number of nights are announced as follows:—Boxes on the second tier, £40; boxes, first tier, 200 guineas, or $1,000; boxes, grand tier, 240 guineas, or $1,200; boxes, pit tier, all holding four persons each, 230 guineas, or $1,100; orchestra stalls (each 38 guineas, or $175; amphitheatre stalls, first and second row (fifty) 12 guineas or $60. Taking the price of a box in the grand tier, which is the most expensive, we find the price per night for each person amounts to about $7.50, which is certainly reasonable, considering the great attractions announced. The following artists are to appear during the season:—M'me Adelina Patti; M'me Pauline Lucca; M'lle Artibello Sessi, M'me Nicolan-Carvalho, M'lle Scalchi, M'me Monbelli. The following will appear for the first time in England:—M'lle Albani (from the Fergola Theatre, Naples); M'lle Florence; M'lle Marianne Brandt (from the Imperial Opera, Berlin), M'me Saar, (from La Scala, at Milan); Signor Caesari (from La Scala, at Milan); Signor Dodoni (from the Imperial Opera, at Petersburg), Herr Verrath (from Copenhagen), and M'lle Emmy Zimmermann (from the Royal Opera, Dresden). Signors Graziani, Nandin, Bagagiolo, Cotogni and Mons. Faure have been re-engaged. The services of Signor Nicolini have also been secured. Herr Koehler (the celebrated basso, from Dresden), Signor Dodoni (from St. Petersburg), and Herr Verginath (from Copenhagen), will make their first appearances in England. Conductors-Signors Arditi and Li[illegible] (their first appearances in England), and M'le Girod (from La Scala, at Milan, her first appearance in England), principal violin solo, Mr. Carrodus; leader of the military band, Mr. D. Godfrey; leader of the ballet, Mr. Bettjeman; organist, Mr. Lockman; suggestion, Signors Lago and Fortunati; maitre de ballet, Mons. Desplaces; appointments by Mr. Labhart; machinist, Mr. Garnsey. The chorus will be under the direction of Signor Carlo Corti, from the Opera del La Scala, at Milan, and embrace upwards of 50 of the best Italian chorus singers in Italy. Stage manager, Mr. A. Harris; artistes coriferes, Miss Lucca, Stolts and Picci; contralti, Grossi and Biancolini; tenori, Tamberlik and Stagno; bartoni, Cotogni and Colini; bassi, Selva and Maini; chef d'orchestre, Martani.

CAMPANINI is perhaps the only Italian tenor who has sung Wagner's music, he having sustained the tenor role in "Lohengrin" with great ease, both at Bologna and Florenee, in which cities the "music of the future" was much applauded, as was also the "tenor of the future." He is engaged for the coming season at Her Majesty's Opera, Drury Lane, London, Eng.

THE MADRID SPANISH OPERA.—The Spanish people were very nearly being deprived of their Italian operatic treat on March 26th, for just before the curtain drew up for "Il Barbiere," at the Queen's Theatre, some of the scenery was discovered on fire, and of course the house was cleared by a heap of pipperstuff. Thanks, however, to the energy and tact of Mr. Roper, Mr. Mapleson's stage manager, the flames were extinguished, after destroying the scenery of the flies and battens and two or three cloths. Mdlle. Colombo, the Rosina of the evening, had to go on the stage in rubbers.

MDLLE. TERESA CARRENO, the charming South American pianiste, has forsworn instrumental music, and is now learning singing from Signor Fontana. She is said to have a fine, pure, high soprano voice, and during Mr. Mapleson's recent tour she sustained the role of Marguerite de Valois in the "Huguenots" very successfully, though it was her debut as an operatic vocalist, and she only sang on a sudden emergency.

Miss ROSE HERSEE and the National Opera Company were announced to close a fourteen weeks' provincial tour at Liverpool, Eng., March 30th.

Variety Halls.

THERE IS NO NOVELTY at the Music Halls in London, Eng., or the provincial halls, worthy of record. Extensive preparations were, however, being made for the Easter Holidays. Mr. John Baum has succeeded Frederick Strange in the management of the Alhambra, London, Eng. Among the Easter attractions there will be Miss Rose Holt and Mr. Paulton, who will appear in a piece written by the latter.....Lilla and Zoe, who were to have performed at the South London Palace and Alhambra, did not do so, as the authorities prevented their performances, and they left for Paris, France, where they were to appear at Easter.

JOHN MILES, pianist and violinist, died at Aldersbot, Eng., March 31st, at the age of thirty-five years.

HARRY CLIFTON and company performed at Reading, Eng., March 25th.

THE W. B. REYNOLDS troupe is traveling on the island of Cuba and meeting with success. They performed at Santiago de Cuba one week, commencing March 18th, and are announced to perform at Kingston, Jamaica, one week, commencing April 15th. Thence through the towns on that island, and then will visit Mexico and South America. An occasional correspondent, writing concerning this troupe, says:—"On March 16th the governor tendered Miss Minnie Wells a benefit, and before the opening of the doors every seat, box, and all the seats, were sold. At the conclusion of the first part a request from some of the police was sent to Miss Wells for some of her photographs. Only one could be found, and that was immediately purchased by an occupant of the first seats for the sum of two ounces (about $34). At the conclusion of the second part Miss Wells was called before the curtain, when the stage was literally covered with flowers, and a bouquet was handed to her having attached thereto a magnificent diamond ring, said to be valued at $300. Mrs. W. B. Reynolds is a great favorite with the audiences, and Miss Carrie Bell Reynolds, in her 'Aerial Suspension,' meets with much applause. Signor Ximenes continues as the ballet master, and Manuel Ximenes as pantomimist. The Misses Harrison have left the company and gone to the Teatro Albion, Havana."

Negro Minstrelsy.

MR. BERNARD, the conductor of the Queen's Minstrels, has purchased for £12,500, a block of buildings at the corner of Nile street, Glasgow, Scotland, a portion of which he will occupy himself, converting into a hall where those minstrels will be permanently located.

TYCE'S CHRISTY MINSTRELS performed at Crediton, Eng., March 12th.

THE FEMALE CHRISTY MINSTRELS performed at Doncaster, Eng., March 20th.

MATHEW'S C. C. C. CHRISTY MINSTRELS were at Shrewsbury, Eng., two nights during the week ending March 23d.

Circuses.

THE TENTING SEASON has commenced in England, and the various companies have left their winter quarters, or are about to do so, for their summer tour. At Chapman's Royal Amphitheatre, Birmingham, Eng., the three brothers Fernandez, who perform upon the lofty bars, and the engagement of Harry Creegata, the clown, were among the novelties.....A portion of Sanger's Circus commenced the tenting season at Leeds, Eng., with Renta's Circus, in Germany.....There is at Ruhrort, in Prussia, a circus of remarkable construction, although the kind is not uncommon in the United States. It is a floating house boat, 300 feet long and nearly 80 feet broad, built in sections, and made to contain, when put together, 2,500 spectators. It has on board lodgings for the company, stable for twenty-five horses, a restaurant, gasometer, printing office and two fire engines. It is now going down the Rhine, giving performances at the towns on the banks.

Miscellaneous.

THE TWO-HEADED NIGHTINGALE COMBINATION exhibited at Bath, Eng., March 15th and 16th.

GEN. TOM THUMB and company commenced a series of exhibitions at Bath, Eng., on March 25th.

PROF. PEPPER WAS announced to commence a series of entertainments at Egyptain Hall, London, Eng., on Easter Monday.

MONA.

GONE TO THE CIRCUS.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

I shall never forget that moonlight night
That I went through the mud and mire,
With my guitar, about ten o'clock,
To serenade Ann Maria.

I passed around to the back of the house,
And, under the chamber windows,
I sang and played till I almost broke
My tight guitar into flinders.

Out on that quiet midnight air
I howled my wild petition
For her to appear and listen to me,
But there came no recognition.

The damp dew settled in my hair,
And covered my fierce moustaches,
But not a sound came in response,
Save from frogs in adjacent marshes.

For you see, while I sang and played
Those waltzes and mazurkas,
Ann Maria had gone—false-hearted girl—
With another chap to the circus.

THE TENTING SEASON.

LIST OF

CIRCUSES, MENAGERIES, SIDE SHOWS, ETC.,

FOR

THE CAMPAIGN OF 1872.

Names of Proprietors, Performers, Agents and other Officials.

COMPILED EXPRESSLY FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

The circus profession has been making rapid strides in improvement of late in their business. It seems but a very few years since, that a single tent, with two or three riders, a few acrobats, gymnasts and a couple of clowns, sufficed to give complete satisfaction to our rural friends, who, with the advent of spring, welcomed the circus as an event in their quiet pastoral lives. But now it will be seen, by perusing our appended annual roster, that a variable show that intends making a tour of the country during the approaching season, that three, four and even six separate tents are employed to accommodate the public satisfactorily to view the many attractions they present. Museums, circuses and menageries combined, though exhibited under separate pavilions, are getting to be quite common affairs. As a much larger capital is now required than formerly to successfully manage a show, it is but natural that greater returns for the investment should be looked for, and therefore many of the largest shows during the coming season will travel almost entirely by railroad, chartering for this purpose special trains, and visiting only the larger cities and towns. This will not only give additional comfort to the periormers and attaches, but they, as well as the ring stock, will be in much better condition to give their performances, and consequently much better satisfaction to their patrons.

When traveling by wagons, the long nocturnal journeys, in all kinds of weather, make sad havoc with the health, both of men and horses. To the railroad trains sleeping cars will be attached, thereby giving the employees much needed rest. As the cages, chariots and horses are all transported by rail, they will appear in good condition in the "grand procession" through the town and, besides, at the performances. A number of the large shows will travel in the above manner, a large tract of country will be left without opposition to smaller shows, which will travel by wagon, thereby enabling them to carry through a season successfully, which hitherto could not be done, as when all traveled by wagons, the large shows were compelled, in order to break the journey, to exhibit in small towns, where they were certain to loose money, and by reason of their more attractive bills and larger numbers thereof, combined with greater features in their entertainments, they so completely overshadowed the small shows, that even if the latter exhibited two or three weeks in advance of the former, the festive rural population declined to patronize them, preferring to wait until the "big show" came.

Another important feature is rapidly coming into usage among the shows, and one in which difficulty is ever experienced in the towns where they exhibit in getting suitable accommodations for the men and horses. The wild animals of a menagerie consume large quantities of raw meat daily, and the circus boys, from the very nature of their avocations, are proverbial for good appetites, and in many towns the butchers, who may have been disappointed by some show not "coming to time," refuse to take any risks in the way of providing extra provender. Therefore, many proprietors of shows prefer to board and lodge the people in their employ, and for that purpose carry with them a large number of waterproof tents, which are applied to the uses of sleeping apartments, stables, kitchen, laundry, etc. The contracting agent, who precedes the show several weeks ere the performances are given, makes the necessary contracts for the delivery of all articles of food, hay, oats, &c., that will be required. Probably more capital is invested in the circus department of the show business for the present season than ever before. Predictions as to the success or non-success of the approaching tenting season, we think, are futile, because the weather has so great an effect upon such undertakings. Yet there are points which may be legitimately considered. The spring, thus far, is very backward; this may affect the forthcoming crops, and as a large proportion of the patrons of those entertainments are closely identified with agricultural pursuits, naturally, if the former suffer, the shows must feel it pecuniarily. Furthermore, we do not think the season will be prolonged as far into the autumn as usual, on account of the Presidential election. Political affairs will engross the public attention, to a certain extent, which will naturally be withdrawn from amusements.

During the past winter some of the oldest and most successful managers have withdrawn from public life, and will devote themselves to the enjoyment of the fruits of their industry. Although they will not actively participate in the excitement, they have consented that there no doubt watch with interest the career of their former confreres. Many shows which were announced to start upon their tour early in April have not done so, the managers wisely preferring to wait for a milder temperature and better condition of roads. After the commencement of the season reports will be found weekly in the CLIPPER of the whereabouts of the various shows, the business they are doing, and items of general interest to the circus profession, as well as the non-professional reader, which will be forwarded us by our numerous correspondents in various parts of the country, who are instructed to report only what passes under their personal observation.

With these remarks we now present our annual list of traveling shows, and other matter of interest to the profession, as well as to the general reader:—

WRITTEN AND COLLATED EXPRESSLY FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

HUMORS OF MINSTRELSY.

INTERLOCUTOR.—George, you seem to have been quite busy during the past week, with no time to attend rehearsals even.

BONES.—Dat's a fact. I was awful busy chasing up de whiskey chaps what's been fraudin' de rev. Oh, we got de scallywags in a tight place, I tell you. No man 'scape me what couldn't cum down wid de price; I let no man off for nuffin.

INTER.—Did de men bribe you, Boney?

BONES.—Yes, bribe me free or four times ebbery day I caught 'em.

INT.—Why that makes you as bad as the whiskey men.

BONES.—I sesy do what I see de white bosses do. Whenebber I see de boss wink at a rebenoo stealer, den I go both eyes on de wittis, and if he didn't cum down, I 'rest de dam feef on me own 'sponsi. I don't 'low no chap to fraud de reb widout cause, I don't.

TAMBO.—Did de dam scoundrels cum down wid de price ob de bribe?

BONES.—Ye-e-s, ebbery time; much as dere life's wuff to go back on me; I'm a U. S. detectif, dat's my motto.

TAMBO.—Did yer sheer de proceeds wid any ob de bosses ob de white persuasion—de rebenoo performers?

BONES.—Why, yes, ob course, I did. De white bosses ob dis awful expensive was always around for dere little divvy. Oh, its nice to be a U. S. consfer.

INT.—You find this sort of business pays better than minstreley, then?

BONES.—Oh, yes, much better; and you hab a sure thing ob it all de year round.

TAMBO.—How is dat, Boney? I tought when de fush git exposed and bribe you wonst, dat ends it.

BONES.—No-s-i! When we find a splehendacel man, we nebber let up on dat infamous fraud on de gobernment; an' if he 'fuse to sock up ebery time I go for him, better he had a mile stone tied round his neck. I 'spose a man what frauds de rebenoo and don't cum down wid de manavolens.

INT.—And that's what has detained you from your legitimate business, catching revenue swipdlers and letting them go free for a consideration?

BONES.—Dat's it, 'zackly; me and Herris Greeley hab a notion of going pards in de biz.

INT.—Why Horace Greeley wouldn't take a part in such a disgraceful business.

BONES.—No, but I want to borry his name to make it appear all right; all de reform politishins do dat.

INT.—Well, after that I must caution the boys to be on their guard against such a firm. And now we will drop this swindling subject, and hear the lesser rebeals, that don't travel with the circus the coming season, tell us about

THE HAPPY PAST.

BY CLAUDE DE HAVEN.

The months are quickly passing by,
Old love returns anew,
The scenes of youth bring back a sigh
For friends that once were true.
Long years have passed since first we met,
Only age is creeping on,
But the "happy past" we'll ne'er forget
While memory holds its throne.
Chorus—Long years have passed, &c.

In youthful days the sun shone bright,
And stars like silver fell,
To be with thee 'twas my delight,
Thy image kept the spell.
Thy gentle words and loving smile,
Like incense on the air,
Was heaven to me, for all the while
Thy image breathed a prayer.
Chorus—Long years have passed, &c.

In trials dark, and midnight gloom,
When sorrow rends the breast,
One thought of thee will cheer me on,
And lull my soul to rest.
I ask but this, as years go by,
Be true as in days of yore,
And when life's task shall end with us,
We'll reach a brighter shore.
Chorus—Long years have passed, &c.

GENTLE LASSIE OF KILLARNEY.

BY ARTHUR W. FRENCH.

Gentle Lassie of Killarney,
I am dreaming still of thee;
I can hear you whisper, "Barney,
Will you never come to me?"
And my heart with tender yearning
Longs for other days to be,
When my feet shall be returning
To you, waiting o'er the sea.
Chorus.—Gentle Lassie of Killarney,
I am dreaming still of thee,
Do you ever whisper, "Barney,
I am waiting, come to me?"

Gentle Lassie of Killarney,
I can see the little stream—
I can see the golden glimmer
Of the sunlight's mellow gleam,
As it fell in shining glory
On us where good-bye was said,
While I left you and the story
Of our lives is still unread.
Chorus.—Gentle Lassie, etc.

Gentle Lassie of Killarney,
Little one so kind and true—
With your sunny, silken tresses,
And your laughing eyes of blue,
Tell me, do you long to meet me—
Do you wait and watch and pray
For the time when I shall greet thee,
Nevermore to go astray!
Chorus.—Gentle Lassie, etc.

THE SIDE SHOW BLOWER.—The following is the latest piece of showman eloquence:—"Gentlemen, this is the celebrated boa-constrictor—the finest, largest, longest, strongest and prettiest animal of its species on exhibition in this country. He was caught in South Africa (as he lay torpid after swallowing two oxen and a drove of sheep), in a wire net, his capture affording a beautiful illustration of successful wire-pulling. It was supposed that the sand where he was found was hot enough to boil eggs, and that his skin was at least 'well done' there is proved by its highly finished appearance. His color is supposed to combine all the hues of all snakes that ever hissed or bit, from the 'old serpent' to the conger eel. His size is variable, as, like most other objects in nature, he expands with heat and contracts with cold. For every rise of five degrees in the thermometer, he gets a foot in longitude. In his native sands he is 150 feet long. The warm season of our own country stretches him 25 feet. Last January, when the thermometer fell to 16 degrees, he shrank into such trifling dimensions as to be invisible through a microscope. His present length you can see for yourselves. His temperance principles are of the Goughist kind. He is a dozen cold water societies rolled into one. His drink at his present dimensions is three gallons of water per week, his food three more gallons. He has great natural talents for politics, which he shows by changing his coat four times a year. Price of admission, 25 cents."

HAREM CRITICISM.—Charles Mathews sought an interview with the celebrated Charles Macklin, who had then attained a hundred years and upwards. He had been recommended to recite to him for the purpose of gaining the veteran's opinion and instructions; and going by appointment to the residence of the aged man, he found him ready to receive him. There was Macklin in his arm chair; and when the door opened and the youth was announced, he did not attempt to rise, nor, indeed, take any notice of the stranger, but remained with an arm on either elbow of the chair he sat in, looking sour and severe at his expected pupil, who, hesitating on the threshold, paused timidly, which occasioned the centenary to call out:—"Come nearer! What do you stand there for? You can't act in the gap of the door." The young man approached. "Well," added Macklin, in a voice ill calculated to inspire confidence, "now let me hear you; don't be afraid." His crabbed austerity completely chilled the aspirant's ardor; however, mustering up all the confidence this harsh reception had left him, he began to declaim according to the approved rule of "speech days." Macklin, sitting like a stern judge waiting to pronounce sentence upon a criminal, rather than to laud a hero, soon interrupted the speech with a mock imitation of the novice's monotonous tones, barking out, "Bow, wow, wow, wow!"

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

THE STRANGER.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY OWEN M. WILSON, JR.

I saw him, Mabel, only once,
A stranger, dark and proud,
As down the lamp-hung room we swept
Amid the merry crowd;
A stranger whose calm, soul-lit eyes,
(Dark wells of mystery deep)
Even now oft beam on me
In visions of my sleep.

I knew him not—yet, when he came
And led me thro' the dance,
Oh, how my timid heart throbbed 'neath
Those strange eyes' thrilling glance;
And when he spoke in tones that were
So soft, yet deep and clear,
As thro' the moon-lit grounds we strolled,
I could not choose but hear.

Beside the marble fount we stood
In the still shade of the grove,
Where Luna's pure and mystic sheen
A spell of witchery wove;
He spoke of brighter scenes than these,
Of France—the German Rhine—
And of fair Italy's peerless skies,
Where the stars more sweetly shine.

Trance-bound, enraptured, listen'd I
To the glowing tales he told,
Beside the fountain's mellow gush,
In the moonlight, pale and cold;
He said his home, all desolate,
Loom'd on a distant shore,
That from its halls all light had fled,
And joy reign'd there no more.

* * * * *

I saw him, Mabel, only once,
And, tho' dead with me,
That magic name keeps lingering on—
"The Stranger"—Roderick Lee.
We parted e'en as we had met,
The friends of but a night.
But with him went all joy of mine,
Of my young life the light.

And so, when mem'ry wanders back
On Fancy's snowy wings,
And from the tomb of vanished joys
The fond past backward brings,
Tears all unbidden will arise,
And shadows cloud my brow,
As o'er Time's soundless depths doth come
Sad thoughts of "Then and Now."

AN ERRING WIFE ATTEMPTS SUICIDE.

Several years ago a man named James Atherton, residing in Lynn, Mass., with a family of a wife and a young daughter, was convicted of the crime of arson, in setting fire to a house in Saugus, and was sentenced to the State Prison for life. After remaining in confinement for ten years the man was made the subject of executive clemency and was pardoned out, but came forth without a wife, as during his confinement she had obtained a divorce from the matrimonial bonds and had assumed her maiden name, which was Elizabeth Noyes. On the man's release he pined for the company of his former partner, and endeavored to prevail upon her to return to his bed and board. In this he was partially successful, and for a short time the couple domiciled beneath the same roof and lived as man and wife, though without the legal authority to do so. But the woman seems to have grown weary of matrimony or anything approximating to it, and to have preferred a life of variety, which, according to rumor, she made herself pretty well acquainted with. Her dislike of Atherton and her determination to be rid of him (so the story runs) finally induced her to complain of him for lewd and lascivious conduct, and the law which prevents man and woman from living together as man and wife without the proper certificate stepped in and packed Atherton off to the House of Correction, where he still remains, and where his connection with this narrative may be brought to a close. The woman then returned to her former manner of living, good or bad, and having attained her object, thrived apace. The daughter before mentioned, and who now appears as the principal witness in this sketch, during her father's confinement grew up, and from a pretty and attractive little girl she developed, as the years rolled on, into a well formed and handsome woman. Under other circumstances she might have grown up a beautiful and noble type of womanhood, but surrounded as she was by bad and unholy influences, her early training neglected, and constantly compelled to look on the bad side of life, with a more than doubtful example of morality ever before her in the form of her only relative, is it a matter of wonder that she grew up with little regard for purity and morality, and with a mind freely open for evil thoughts? Two or three years ago, perhaps a little more, this girl, whose name is Helen, married a young man named John Trefethren, and since that time the young couple, with the girl's mother, have lived together in a house on Tirrell's court, leading from Pleasant street. It is believed, and documentary evidence sufficient to establish the fact seems to be existent, that of late an improper intimacy has sprung up between the young wife, Helen, and a young man named Charles Hatch, who is by occupation the proprietor to a saloon on Oxford street. Frequent visits from Hatch to the house in Tirrell's court, at times when the husband was absent, and many other circumstances, only applicable to such cases, have strengthened the belief that Hatch has been a destroyer of matrimonial peace, that Trefethren has been the injured husband and the young Helen a guilty wife. The above facts being known, the finale of the brief story may be told in a few words, being a simple recital of circumstances developed this morning, which are as follows: About 10 o'clock this forenoon Hatch came running to the station and related to the officers a story of having been attacked by Elizabeth Noyes. According to his statements, which were given with no few indications of alarm, he was in his saloon, engaged in cutting meat, when the Noyes woman entered, seized the large butcher knife from his hand, and made a furious attack upon him. He ran out of the saloon, closely pursued by the infuriated woman, who uttered loud threats against the seducer of her daughter, and was evidently bent on murder. Hatch finally escaped by running into the saloon and locking the door. A compromise was then effected by the promise of Hatch to go down and see Helen, who, as her mother said, had taken laudanum and was dying. Instead of going to the house where the woman was, Hatch went to the station, where he was detained. An officer then went to the house and arrested the indignant mother, who was still raving against Hatch and whose hands were covered with blood, she having lacerated them in her pursuit of Hatch. Her story of the laudanum was found to be true, for stretched upon a bed lay poor Helen, suffering from the effects of the drug. She had purchased a two-ounce vial of laudanum, and, bent on self-destruction, had swallowed a good portion of the poison. She was carried to the City Hall, moaning piteously all the way, and alternately calling the names of her husband and of "Charles." Physicians were summoned and proper care was bestowed upon the poor unfortunate, and at last accounts there seemed to be a prospect of her recovery.—Boston Herald, April 2d.

SUICIDE OF A YOUNG LADY.

A young lady, apparently from twenty-two to twenty-five years of age, named Frances Fyler, from Quincy, in this state, committed suicide last evening at the Franklin House, corner of Bates and Larned streets, where she had been stopping for a day or two. It appears that she arrived here on Friday afternoon, went to the Franklin House, registered her name on the book as "Miss Frances Fyler, Quincy," and was shown to a room on the second floor, near the south end of the building facing on Bates street. During Saturday she went out several times; on Sunday morning attended Christ Church, and went out again for a walk in the afternoon. She appears not to have made any acquaintances, and, last evening, while eating supper, was observed by the proprietor of the house to be in a state of apparent despondency. In the evening she retired to her room. Shortly after eleven o'clock the people occupying rooms near to hers heard loud screaming proceeding from her room, and word was immediately sent to the watchman, who, with two other men, went to her door and called for her to open it. No attention, however, was paid to the call, and, after some delay, the key in her door was pushed out and the door unlocked with a duplicate key. The woman was found lying on her bed, with all her clothes on, and suffering greatly. Dr. Book was at once sent for, and came at once, but she died just before his arrival. A paper of strychnine, found on the bureau, suggested the cause of her death, which the physician declared to be the result of poison, probably taken about half an hour previous to her death. A letter was also found on the bureau, written with a lead pencil, evidently just before taking the poison. We give it below:—

DETROIT, March 24th, 1872.

DEAR BROTHER.—I believe I wrote you first at Adrian, but what I wrote I could not tell. I think I said I would go out to Aunt Mayes'. I remember Dock got my trunk checked through to Quincy. I know I thought I never could go to either of my aunts when I got down to the depot. It seems like a dream ever since I left Sates', and even before. Don't know how I came to get my baggage checked here, but here it is and me with it. My God! It seems to me I shall go mad when I think of my ruined character. There is no one knows anything about it except those that have had the same trouble. Henry, I hope you will forgive me for doing as I have done, but I thought I would go to work here. I cannot go among my friends. If you could know just how I feel you would not blame me. I brought this on myself, and do not deserve the sympathy of my friends. I see that I have disgraced you, and all connected with me.

She also left a note to Mr. Love, the clerk of the hotel, requesting him to send the following dispatch to her brother, Henry A. Fyler, Coldwater, Mich.:—

MARCH 24th, 1872.

BROTHER HENRY.—Here I am at the Franklin House. Come, for I am very sick. Your sister, FRANK.

Her brother has been telegraphed to, and will probably arrive here to-day. The strychnine was evidently procured at Adrian, as it bears the label of a druggist of that city, but the name was torn off, and only the name "Adrian" remained on the paper. The deceased was a fine looking girl, of medium height and black hair, was well dressed, had a good supply of excellent clothing in her trunk, and wore a gold watch and chain. Her demeanor since she arrived at the house attracted no special notice, aside from her apparent despondency.—Detroit, Mich., Tribune, March 25th.

YOUTHFUL DEPRAVITY.

Some few weeks back we published an item relating how that a Mr. Krause, teacher of languages, late of Lachine, had been arrested in Boston, Mass., charged with gross misconduct towards his own daughter, a girl of fifteen. The item stated that the case was remanded, and since then we have searched the Boston papers in vain for further information. Yesterday, however, we were waited upon by a gentleman who introduced himself as the Mr. Krause in question, and who informed us that the whole affair was simply an instance of how unnatural a child could be towards its parents. Our visitor proceeded to relate how his daughter had early shown habits and inclinations which rendered her a source of dire distress to both him and her mother; how that she had been expelled from various schools for her misconduct, and how that her only desire during the past year or so was to escape from parental control and go headlong to ruin. Her pranks at one time caused her father to lose his mind, and at one time it was thought he would remain a raging lunatic for the rest of his life, but his reason returned, and, in the hope that a knowledge of the world might cause his misguided girl to see the error of her ways, he, a few months back, took her with him to Boston to see if the prospects held out to one of his profession were such as to warrant a permanent residence. During this visit the father was arrested, as related, but released directly, he procured from Montreal proof of his child's depravity from prominent clergymen and heads of educational establishments, under whose supervision she had been, and who had had to expel her from their roofs. A sadder record than these documents it is impossible to imagine. Fancy a parent obliged to carry them about him as a protection against his own child's machinations, and that child a young girl just budding into womanhood. Mr. Krause states that he learnt from the lady in whose house he and daughter boarded at Boston, that the girl frequently expressed her intention of running away from him, and he also learnt that she tried to persuade a young man, the lady's son, to elope with her. Much more of a nature such as can do no good if published, but simply reveals more strongly the kestrel blood in her veins, was told us by this stricken parent. He states that he means to still try in every way to win her back to virtue and probity, but has slight hopes of success, as in a few years he will have no legal control over her. The girl is described as of comely looks, quite womanly in person, and an extremely clever musician.—Montreal, C. E., Star, April 2d.

"BRICK'S" BREACH OF PROMISE.—In the case in which Saidee E. Wilkinson, of Connecticut, sued Mark M. Pomeroy to recover $25,000 damages for an alleged breach of promise of marriage, and in which Gen. Butler, counsel for the plaintiff, moved to strike out a portion of defendant's pleadings, on the ground that they were scandalous and not pertinent to the general issue, Judge Blatchford, says the N. Y. Sun, has just rendered a decision granting the motion, and giving the defendant leave to amend his answer within ten days, so as to plead to the general issue, on condition that the defendant complies with the desire of the plaintiff to try the case at the present term of the court. The matter ordered to be stricken out was to the effect that the plaintiff was unchaste, and Judge Blatchford, in ordering it struck out, said that it was not only scandalous and impertinent, but was libelous.

AN ABANDONED WIFE.—A few days since a married couple from Philadelphia arrived at Boston by the Old Colony Railroad. The husband left the wife in the waiting room while he went to procure their baggage. The poor lady waited, but her spouse did not return, and without breakfast, dinner or supper, at last sought refuge at the fourth station, where she enjoys the luxury of a cell.

CALIFORNIA STATE CHAMPIONSHIP.
RENO VS. ACTIVE.

The third and final game of the series arranged between these clubs for the state championship took place at San Francisco, Cal., on Sunday, March 17th. The game at the lead was slightly in favor of the Actives, but in the latter part the Renos rallied and by splendid batting won the laurels. Appended is the score:—

BALL ITEMS FROM THE HUB.—From a recent issue of that live Boston daily, the Herald, we learn that besides their gymnasium practice the Red Stockings have begun to harden their hands by catching, and to exercise their muscles in throwing, having taken possession of the loft of a building on Washington street, where they practice daily. Ryan, the eleventh man, begins to show up in a favorable light, and although a "feather weight," it can be seen that he has the right stock, while the way in which he sends a ball in "on" makes it not impossible that the Bostons may have more than one swift pitcher before the close of the season. Among the juniors the coming season will be a lively one, as three new prizes have been offered by Messrs. Chandler and Sumner. The first prize for the juniors is a handsome blue silk pennant, fringed in gold, in size 34 feet long and six feet wide. On each side, in gold letters in a scroll, is the inscription, "Champion Juniors." The pennant is intended to be hoisted as a flag on the ground where the champion club may play, and is transferable from year to year, the winner of 1872 holding it until the close of the season of '73, when it is passed over to the winning club, unless the champions succeed in holding it, in which case the victors in the succeeding season will become its nominal possessors. The value of the prize is $100. The second prize is a silver mounted bat, composed of various kinds of wood, highly finished and similar to the champion bat of last season; this prize to become the property of the junior club making the second best score during the season. The bat is valued at $50. The third prize is a very fine set of silk foul-ball flags, one red and one blue, heavily fringed with gold and mounted upon rosewood staffs; these to become the property of the club making the third best score during the season. The flags are valued at $35.

VARIETIES DRAMATIC CLUB.—A club bearing the above title has been organized by members of the Varieties Theatre company, New Orleans. They have several good players, among them being George Holland, Jr., and E. M. Brelsford, who formerly was a member of the Keystone, of Philadelphia; the latter is a very swift pitcher and fine fielder also. The catcher, Ives, was formerly of the Ætna Club, of Chicago. The following is the nine:—E. Ives, c.; R. M. Brelsford, p.; Cruso, 1st b.; Cain, 2d b.; Rhodes, 3d b.; Kegan, l. f.; G. Holland, c. f.; J. Baggot, r. f.

THE CHAMPION CLAMP, a new attachment for cricketers and base ball players' shoes, patented by E. S. Ellis, is advertised in another column. This clamp will fit any boot or shoe and can be secured or removed very quickly. It is endorsed by the captains of the leading base ball clubs as being the best invention of its character in the market, and as supplying a want long felt by players.

A. L. BUSH, whose card find elsewhere, is prepared to furnish clubs and the trade with the New England champion base ball club, which are said to excel in lightness and durability. He also makes a specialty of prize clubs.

To Correspondents.

THEO. M. BROWN.—Thank you; the Cleveland prize problems are very welcome.

HANCOCK BR., Boston.—We are, as always, compelled to decline attempting to examine other editors' problems: still, if you will tell us the author and publisher of this one, we will try to help you.

E. A. CRANE, Savannah.—We are much obliged, indeed, by the attention; information gladly used. By all means let us see two or three of the best games.

H. J. M.—Forward the solution of your problem and we will look at it.

J. N. BOSSON.—Glad that No. of the CLIPPER furnished you such solid food for reflection. Enig. No. 759 is perfectly correct. 1. Q to her B 6, K to Kt 3; 2. R to K 5, etc.

F. H. CUSTISS.—Mr. Pindar has not sent us any of the games. Prob. No. 793 yields to your present modus, only One Difficulte runs:—

1. B × P	K to B 4 (1)	4. B to B 2 — K moves
2. Kt-Q 5 +	K-Kt 5 (2)	5. R-K 3 — K moves
3. R-K B 4 +	K-K 6	6. R mates.

(2) If Black 2. K to Kt 3, or 4; 3. R to Kt 2 +, and mates in three more.

(1)
1.	K to B 3	4. P to Q 4 + — K moves
2. Kt to Q 5 +	K-his 3 (3)	5. B-Q Kt 6 — K moves
3. Kt-Q B 3	K moves	6. R-K B 6, mate.

(3) If 2. K to his 4, White still mates in four. The Ill. Lon. News observes:—The very intricate-ingenious prob. are too numerous to publish; but those given will suffice, we believe, to enable any player to discover the remainder."

"Now then, who wants to know how's this for 80? 1. R to A 2. R—F H. C wants to know how's this for 80? 1. R to Q 6; 2. K to Q 4; 3. Kt to K B 3; 4. R to Q 5; 5. Kt to Q 3, mate. Give it "a gimlet look."

CHESS IN SAVANNAH.—We are highly gratified to receive from our Savannah correspondent an account of a genuine chess revival in that city. They have organized a chess club, with Maj. A. L. Hartridge, their acknowledged best player, president; Col. Edwd. C. Anderson, Jr., vice-president, and R. J. Larcombe, secretary. The president gave a handsome chess table to be competed for in the late tourney, and 32 knights entered to tilt for the prize, for the best two of three to constitute a course. Only four survived in the lists at the date of our information. We expect two or three of the games, and to hear further from so spirited a beginning.

PORTRAIT.—The next portrait and biography in the Chess Journal's series, as we learn by advance sheets kindly forwarded us, is to be that of Theo. M. Brown. The London Era appears to have just discovered that Mr. B. is "an American composer of considerable ability." How are you, "considerable!" Chance to grow, eh?

(e) A mistake. The correct move, by which the Attack would have maintained their Pawn with a good game, was Q R to B 1.
(f) Dr. M. & Co. here proposed to draw.
(g) This mastery coup-leris the game. If K to Q B 5 must have drawn. Prof. A. and Dr. G., indeed, maintained that this would win; but Herr Minckwitz points out that it would only, but surely, draw.
(h) The move carries them to victory.

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, April 8th, '72.

Has any person heard any other person say anything about the coming of "gentle spring," with its over-rated "etherial mildness?" Isn't it time that something was written on this subject? Well, according to the most trustworthy authorities, as demonstrated in "Poor Richard's" and other comic almanacs, spring ought to have settled down among us some weeks ago; but, as we are writing, this 8th day of April, fires are not unconfortable, which is something unusual for this time of year. But we had a foretaste of spring during four days of the past week, and with the warm sunshine, and the pleasant winds which stirred up the dust and whirled it through the streets, filling our eyes and ears and mouths with more than the proverbial "peck," we were reminded at last that old winter has his quietus made. And business has begun to take a spurt upwards—the streets are thronged with what we call the moths and butterflies of fashion, who make raids on store-tenders, and rear and tear like they had nothing to wear during the whole winter season. And the theatres present an evergreen appearance, the pious element having emerged from their closets (where they have probably been immured during Lent) like a turtle coming forth from the bowels of the earth, that its voice may be heard in harmony with other birds of song. In fact, so long has been the reign of old Boreas, our friends became so impatient that some of them actually transported field sports to their indoors. Think of that now. Why, a game of bowling on calling upon some friends the other night, we didn't see them playing "Cricket—on the Hearth." And another party, whose card and all virtues would make us think better of them, were positively running in a "cold deck" before a glowing fire; least-wise they were doing the "Hidden Hand." ..... Everything looks promising for high life and no mourning. Why, not one of our theatres specie payments are to be resumed this evening. We'll make rhymes in honor of the event:—

SPECIE PAYMENT AT THE BROADWAY
The public's voice with rapture thrills—
Our Wall street has been "sold"—
For now, in exchange for coin it fills,
Mme Burnside gives us "Gold."

.....Did you hear about Olive Logan? She's one of the boys, she is. Tell you how it was:—Olive, who is a live lecturer, was holding forth on "Girls," out west. Says she, thoughtless like, "Whenever I see a pretty girl I want to clasp her in my arms." "So do I," was the simultaneous response from a number of young men in the audience. It kind o' set Olive back a peg, for she had no idea that the chaps out that way were so peert like; but she recovered herself, and brought down the house and the fellers by answering, "Well, I don't blame you, boys!".....And talking about girls, and love, and things, the gentleman who does the nice talk in Niblo's Opera House programmes, alleges that "Lalla Rookh" "is as bright and lively as a clear morning in May;" that "it is as delightful as the first dawn of love;" and that it "fairly quivers with beauty." Cupid must have shot an arrow into that precious soul's diaphragm or he never would have had such wicked thoughts. Single man, too, they say—but whisper it gently.....Your Jim was somewhat insulted, he thinks, one night last week. Jimmy, always after coming from a place of amusement, goes for a free lunch, as anybody of his temperament would, under the circumstances. James always does his duty to himself on such festive occasions. This night we are telling you about, James fell in pleasant places in the Bowery, where clam chowder, pork and beans, and similar delicacies were on the free list. Jim went in, like his hand, is to command the master of the lunch, seeing the boy struggling and wrestling with a fourth plate of chowder, quietly observed:—"Say, young feller, haven't you just come from Kentucky?" "Why?" responded the youth, not caring to lose time by wasting words. "Because," said the fiendish luncheman, pointing to Jim's mouth, "I see that you've got the Mammoth Cave."..... Forrest, who has accumulated a very large fortune in silver and gold, although changing from place to place, may still be called a "fixed" star.....Our managers seem to be working out of the old groove, in so far as they now give evidence of catering for certain classes—now, Niblo's is about to introduce "Black Friday," which, a black and tan friend of ours asserts, will draw the entire colored population of New York. Tony Pastor, at the Theatre Comique, is about to give us "Blue Monday," in the hope, probably, of tapping the world of shoemakers; while Wallack is to show us "Partners for Life," as a sop to the business community. .....Here's another curiosity:—In North Carolina they have discovered a colored lady whose circumference is seven feet at the waist. It seems to us that there must naturally be much waste where that woman is..... Children get in the dumps if they are not taken at least once a week to see "Humpty Dumpty." G. L. Fox is a blessing in disguise to parents. While the children are seeing "Humpty" their fond mothers may now have the privilege of seeing "any other man." Oh, that will be joyful. Parents should erect a statue to George as another father of his country.....Have you seen any of the Dolly Vardens yet? Big thing. Everybody's going after Dolly Varden. Even "Our Jim" is having a summer suit built on the Dolly Varden plan, with a "big son" flower as the predominating feature..... Throwing up engagements is getting to be worse than sea sickness. Every now and then we hear of some one running off with his "manager in the bill," and managers are compelled to post them up as dangerous signals, as old Probabilities would say. These fly by night men always put us in mind of the right hand man in a game of All Fours, seeing that they all cut before playing..... Some of our theatrical advertisements are quite a puzzle to people not "up" in the walks of the drama. One of our patrons advertises to "paint scenes and drop curtains," whereupon a not-very-well-disposed sort of man calls to say that he don't think there is much art required to drop curtains. And yet for clubbing this idiot out of our office he expresses dissatisfaction with our course. Editors have a rough time of it.....We now propose to compose a verse or two in commemoration of ourselves:—

A LIVE PAPER.

That the NEW YORK CLIPPER is a sheet of influence,
No one will deny;
That it occupies a vast field of usefulness
That like the sun it moves the world around,
Giving warmth and light and life wherever found,
Is beyond dispute;
Likewise its views on the drama, sport and things,
Is equally cute.
As a world's medium for the dissemination of news,
It's beyond compare;
While its contests, on all important matters of the day,
Are "rich and rare."
If you have lost a friend, and don't know where to find him,
Like little Bo peep,
Search our columns through and through, and then you'll be,
Not far behind him.

These lines, as will be seen, are a trifle irregular, and somewhat out of gear, but we have long since left the old and beaten track, and struck out a course for ourselves. We make our verses short; in that way they do not become very tiresome.....Our old friend, the "Man in the Flies," who has been on his beam ends for the past few months, has been resurrected, and he desires to offer a sort of skeleton for a new play, which from its novelty, and the peculiar tastes of the shirtstand people of the present age, he thinks ought to succeed. We bespeak for the old "invalid" a "patient" hearing:—

A FEW EXTRACTS FROM A PATENT DRAMMY.

MISTER FRANK QUEREE.—DERE SIR.—Wen I last rote yer, I tho't as I had forrever dispensed with the theatrikle arneem and retired into the shades o' private life, never agen to don the socks and backskin for any purpos whatsomever. But wen cash's go on forever windin' up carthigo and latha down of flys for a livin,' and soo, as the popular taste have agen reered about and my favorit stile have come round agen, I hav ventured 'wonst mor' to put on mi armor and study on the plots for a fresh debut. The play is one of mi own conseption, and, instid of confining of itself too one perticklar stile, goes on a principol to sattisfi all tastes, from Shakspere down'ards. In scene the fust, act the fust, the 'ere coms in with measurd tred and folded arms—wen the following silloquy enshoo:—

Too the graces ov the mind. E's poor indeed
That makes grimase and grins is daily food,
And bidds farewel too branes. O, hackneyd life!
I weary of the ye'er'ed ending strife.
I've reached bed rock at last. My game was good,
But fatian wont one better on my pie,
And yewkerd me. O, that this solid flesh
Had sum of the wer full of bodkins in hash.
But the mews shakes me at mi direst pinch.

O! for the good ole dasn of managers!
Whom never stickled for grammatick rules,
And taught their stars to hemulate the howl,
And went it strong on lungs. When spektikles
Was made too prodice, and not for legs;
They wasn't now heres. Now they're everywheres,
And even gentle Shakspere wont go down
Without ballay and spektikle throw'd in.
I'll put mi trust in the ingenuous public,
Lern to throw flip-flaps, study harlequin,
And render Hamlit on the flying trapeze,
MacBeth upon the tight rope, Iago on stilts,
While half the balls in mest dens shall pass;
Hire the Grand Opery and Richard play
Upon a milk wite steed. Soe may I fill
My pockit to the brim, and thrive in one
And please the critick wiles my part I play.
But wood they stand the press! I—there's the rubb!

Eckseter, eckseter. The acksbn ov the pis bein now farely consumated, the 'Ero indulges in a bit ov sentimentil singin too the music ov the picolo. Then the Shero, she coms on, and they hav an m-brace and a darase, arter witch the rivle, oo is a Nero too in 'is way, rushes in, sord in hand, and there are a kombat with brodsords arter the good ole fashiond stile, wun up and to down, eckseter; also a ballit, a pitch battle and a kombat, for witch the survices ov the 9th regiment hav been duly be-poke. If this doont foch them, then I'm out an' injured—that's all!"

City Summary.

W. S. HIGGINS' drama of "Out of the Fire" was acted at the Bowery Theatre during the past week, including a matinee on Saturday, attracting good sized audiences. Since its first production at Wood's Museum, on Jan. 1st, when we reviewed it at some length, it has undergone some alterations. The characters of Mrs. Wilder and Alice, both of which were excellently performed by Mrs. W. G. Jones, have been written up, and the fire scene which was supposed to take place in the Five Points, now occurs in a bell tower, in one of the upper rooms of which the bowie knife fight takes place, and the fire is kindled below, and as the flames ascend Joe Wilder escapes by grasping a hitching rope, which bends beneath his weight, although bearing him safely to earth. This scene was received with much enthusiasm. In the concert saloon scene, in the second act, Tom Bolas sang Dutch songs; Charley Lord performed a song and dance entitled "Walking Through the Snow," and Eddy Brady appeared in protean sketches, all of which were favorably received by the audience. The drama, which, as a whole, was well acted, was rehearsed during the week by a drama in one act entitled, "Sally Smart."

"POLL AND PARTNER JOE," a burlesque in two acts, from the pen of Mr. Burnand, was produced at Niblo's Garden on April 1st, and acted during the week, including a matinee on Saturday, with the following cast:—

Mary Maybud..Mrs. John Wood	Sam Sadler.....J. Brutone
Black Brandon.....John Brougham	Dan Peters.....Miss Emily Thorne
Harry Hallyard.Miss Jennie Lee	Lieut. Manly.....Julian Cross
Joe Tiller.....Harry Pearson	Dame Tiller.....Harry Cox
Sam Snatcham..Chas. J. Morton	.....G. Chorister
Watchful Waxend...A.W. Young	Miss Flora.....Miss Fenno

It was preceded on Monday evening by a farce which was afterwards omitted. The burlesque is not particularly funny; many of the puns were unintelligible to an American audience, and the music had been made familiar by other troupes. It would be futile to attempt any explanation of the plot. Mrs. John Wood acted Mary Maybud (Poll) with much archness and vivacity, and had the song, "His Heart is True to Poll," been less familiar to the audiences, we think Mrs. Wood's performance of it would have created a sensation. Black Brandon, a burlesque melo-dramatic villain, was fairly acted by G. W. Anson, but the inevitable comparison with a popular comedian of a well known American troupe, who introduced that style of acting upon the American stage, did not result favorably for Mr. Anson. Miss Jennie Lee, although thoroughly in earnest as Harry Halyard, failed to give complete satisfaction. Her dancing was, however, liberally applauded. Harry Cox as Dame Tiller was excellently made up, and appeared to greater advantage than heretofore. He sang a new song, and more than redeemed himself in the dancing department. Miss Flora Fenno's dancing was excellent. A pantomime entitled "Jack, the Giant Killer;" the wonderful equestrian juggling feats of John Harry Rooke, the double act of Charley Fish, who performed riding on Mlle. Caroline Rolland, William Dutton in somersault riding, the musical performances of the Jee Brothers, and the amusing witticisms of Julian Kent and William H. Jee, the clowns.

LITTLE OR NO CHANGE was made in the programme at Bryant's Minstrels during the past week. The piece de resistance, "Julius Sneezer," has achieved great popularity, and Dan Bryant, Nelse Seymour, and others, create much amusement in their various roles. W. Henry Rice's burlesque ballads are quite a feature of the evening's entertainment. Dan Bryant as the "Drum Major," J. W. Meadergwn as the "Charcoal Man," and sketches and songs fill out a pleasing programme.

HERNANDEZ FOSTER, clown, and Harry Causland, musical comique, were the fresh appearances at Tony Pastor's during the past week. The former appeared in a comic trick pantomime entitled the "Clown's Revel; or, The Mystic Gift," evincing considerable talent in his specialty. He was well supported by Johnny Queen as harlequin; J. W. Graves, pantaloon, and Miss Mary Gorsett, columbine. Harry Causland, in a musical act, performed upon a great variety of instruments correctly and with considerable taste, and met with the emphatic approbation of the audience. McIntire and Foley, in the song and dance called the "Mississippi Twins," met with much favor. Frank Kerns performed Mazeppa in a burlesque of that name. Tony Pastor sang the usual number of comic songs in response to enthusiastic encores, and a number of sketches and acts filled out the programme.

THE MISSES FLORA AND JENNIE WESTON, vocalists, whose performances we have recently reviewed, and Master Clarence Burton, were the fresh appearances at the Thirty-fourth Street Theatre during the past week, and their performances were favorably received. Master Burton evinced considerable proficiency in his performances on the banjo. Conchita Ronzati, Ione Lang, Josephine Walby, Belle Rice, Sheppard and Hogan, Hurley and Marr, continued during the week.

NELSE SEYMOUR, of Bryant's Minstrels, is announced to take a matinee benefit on Thursday, April 11th, when he will have the assistance of prominent performers from other minstrel and variety halls. Mr. Seymour is a great favorite in this city and deserves to have a large attendance.

AT THE SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS the notable features of the first part, last week, consisted of the singing of "Little Darling Linger Near Me," by C. Templeton; D. S. Wambold's charming rendition of "My Little One's Waiting for Me;" Billy Birch comically rendered "My Policy," and the finale was liberally interspersed with imitations of birds, locusts, frogs, etc. Charley Backus, in the sketches of "Dr. Colton's Laughing Gas," the "Millers" and "Examination Day," farmed ample opportunity to display his comic powers. Bobby Newcombe performed his own song and dance called "Rosey Posey," Salcedo a solo on the cornet, and the quartet song and dance "Kum and Kiss Me" constituted an attractive feature.

"ARTICLE 47" is the title of a drama, in five acts, adapted from the French of M. Belot by Mr. Augustin Daly, and produced at the Fifth Avenue Theatre for the first time on Tuesday evening, April 2d, in the presence of an audience which filled the auditorium in every part. It was acted then, and during the balance of the week, with the following cast:—

Count de Rives, Geo. H. Griffiths	Chevalier von Krommel weln.....F. Chapman
President of the Court of Assizes.....D. H. Harkins	Commissary of Police.....Edmund Pierce
Lauriston.....George De Vere	Baroness de Mirac..Miss Fanny Davenport
Dr. Paul Combes.....W. Davidge	Mlle. Cora.....Miss Clara Morris
Henri Deville.....Louis James	Madame Duhamel..Mrs. G. H. Gilbert
Georges Duhamel..Henry Crisp	Marcelle.....Miss Linda Dietz
Victor Mazilier...George Parkes	Miss Dowson.....Miss Griffiths
Potain.....James Lewis	Countess von Krommel weln...Miss Robert Norwood
Old Simon.....W. J. Lemoyne	Lizette.....Miss Ida Yerance
M. Chatelard.....Owen Fawcett	Marie.....Miss Louise Volmer
Foreman of the Jury..A. Burnett.	Grosjean.....W. Beekman
Joseph.....G. Godfrey

It was reported with entirely new scenaries, painted expressly therefor, that of a salon in the house of the Baroness de Mirac, used during the third and fourth acts, being one of the most elegant, elaborate and tasteful scenes ever presented upon any New York stage. The drama is powerful and effective, slightly objectionable in its moral tone, and some of the characters are at times almost repulsive. The title of the drama is derived from article 47 of the French Penal Code, which decrees in effect that every discharged convict shall reside during the remainder of his life at such town or village as may be fixed upon by the proper authorities, and any disobedience of that order renders the ex-convict liable to re-arrest and imprisonment.

The first act of the drama is devoted entirely to the representation of a criminal trial supposed to have taken place at Rosen, France. We see the president of the Court of Assizes, with his two associates upon the bench, sitting beneath and directly in front of whom is the prisoner, Lauriston, the clerk in the centre of the apartment a table, with a chair for the witnesses; on the left the prisoner, guarded by gens d'armes, near him his counsel, and on the right the jury and spectators. At the rise of the curtain the trial is progressing, and we learn that Georges Duhamel had recently arrived from America in company with a Creole, Mlle. Cora, with whom he is madly, devotedly in love. In consequence of a difference between that lady and Victor Mazilier, a roue, shortly after her arrival, the jealous passions of Duhamel are inflamed to that extent that he visits Mlle. Cora, who is a guest of the Baroness de Mirac, and shoots her with a pistol, the ball taking effect upon the side of her face, inflicting a wound which, though not mortal, leaves a scar which disfigures her beauty for life. For attempting the life of Mlle Cora, and likewise attempted robbery, Georges Duhamel is now on trial for his life. A number of witnesses are examined, one or two of whom create a little mirth and relieve the dull monotony of the entire act. The jury bring in a verdict of guilty with a recommendation to mercy, and Georges Duhamel is sentenced, in consequence of the latter clause, to only five years imprisonment in the galleys. The act is dry, tiresome, and not of vital importance to the drama. It had better have been a recital of the story of the trial of conviction by any of the characters at the opening of the drama would have answered the same purpose, as the differences between the legal forms of procedure in our courts and our country of the present day are not sufficiently marked to interest a theatrical audience. The drama proper may, therefore, be said to commence with the second act, the action of which takes place at the house of Dr. Paul Combes, a prominent physician of Rosen. Eight or nine years is supposed to have elapsed since the occurrence of the events in the first act, and we learn that during that period of time Georges Duhamel has become Article 47, and with his mother has been residing in Rosen, under the name of Girard. During that residence he had formed the acquaintance of Marcelle, a young and lovely daughter of the Comte de Rives, a nobleman of the neighborhood, with a passionate love was mutually cherished in secret, as Georges dared not reveal to her his past life. Trusting that absence might conquer the passion, he, with his mother, went abroad. At the opening of the act we find the Comte De Rives consulting with Dr. Combes with regard to Marcelle's health, which is rapidly failing. The Doctor announces to Marcelle that he has received information that Georges Girard and his mother are to return to their former residence that day. While the conversation between the Doctor and Marcelle is going on, Georges Girard, and the Count de Rives, perceiving that the Doctor's diagnosis of her case was correct when he affirmed that she was in love with Georges Girard, announces that he will not oppose the alliance. Georges Girard and mother arrive, and there is a happy meeting between the lovers. Among the numerous callers upon Dr. Combes are Lauriston, the Article 47, who recognizes both Georges and his mother, and upon her asking if they are not named Duhamel, receives a stout denial, and upon this tableau, of fear of discovery, the act terminates. The third act, in which we are introduced to the salon of the Baroness de Mirac, the resort of fashionable society, and where play runs high. Mlle Cora is making her appearance, and her friend appears to be occupied with only one thought—revenge upon Georges Duhamel. The marriage between Georges Girard and Marcelle has been consummated, and we learn from the Count de Rives, who has become reconciled to the match, that the latter has promised to call for him that evening at ten o'clock. Mlle Cora's persistent inquiries about the appearance and habits of Georges Girard excites in the minds of the Baroness and her friends the suspicion that Georges Duhamel and Girard at once prepare to prevent a meeting between Mlle Cora and Girard. As the clock strikes the hour of ten the latter is announced, and shortly after both Cora and Girard come face to face and alone. She reproaches him with the past, and threatens to denounce him, not only to the law but to his wife. He demands to know the price of her silence, and is informed that he must pass nightly some hours in her society, or be compelled to accept the alternative. In the following act we find Girard at the Baroness' house and playing heavily, and we learn from the Count de Rives that Georges' neglect of his wife, coupled with his newly fledged passion for gambling, is seriously affecting Marcelle's peace of mind and health. The latter comes to the Baroness' house, meets Cora and her husband, and naturally a stormy scene ensues. Georges pleads to his wife in vain, and Cora denounces him. Georges then tells his wife the history of his crime, and bears her fainting from the house, denouncing Cora as insane. The latter being left alone becomes suddenly bereft of reason, and with the cunning peculiar to insanity accomplishes her revenge by writing a letter to the Prefect of Police, denouncing Georges Duhamel, known as Girard, for a violation of Article 47, which terminates the act. The fifth act opens at the summer house on the estate of Count de Rives. Marcelle, Girard, Count and Mother Fly order of the Count, who is totally ignorant of the true state of affairs, and who believes that she is a friend of the family, while the Baroness is the enemy she has lured Georges into play, and alienated his affections from his wife. Georges, his mother, and Marcelle, are apprised by the Baroness that Cora had written and sent the letter by an unknown messenger to the police, denouncing him; they immediately resolve upon flight, and as they are about taking their departure they are confronted by an officer of the police, who demands to see Georges Girard. Marcelle swoons and general consternation prevails, but when the officer states that he simply has to notify Girard that the police desire his deposition with regard to the sanity of M'lle Cora, he having been known as a visitor to her house, comparative tranquility is restored, and Georges, under the fourth act, gave evidence of ability not hitherto conceded to her. The Misses Roberta Norwood, Ida Yerance and Louise Volmer, evinced care and attention in the brief parts confided to them. The dialogue of the drama needs further curtailment. The performance on the first representation did not conclude until 12.30 o'clock A. M., but towards the end of the week the conclusion was reached at about half past eleven.

A RE-CONSTRUCTED VERSION OF "Humpty Dumpty" was presented for the first time at the Olympic Theatre on Monday evening, April 1st, being the 251st representation of that pantomime during its present revival. Considerable new scenery had been painted for it, and many of the costumes worn by the danseuses were new, tasteful, and elegant. The scene representing the well of Count Orlando Fiddle, in which Miss Lulu Prior and G. A. Beane, previous to the harlequinade, and a song, sang by the former, met with approbation. A sprite named Spiderion, performed by Master Topack, was introduced. The tricks were all new, worked without hindrance, and gave satisfaction. George L. Fox, as the clown, kept the audience in good humor and acted with much freshness. Charley Fox, as usual, was excellent as pantaloon, and the harlequins and columbines performed by the Kiralfys were as sprightly as ever. Of the incidental attractions the following have been retained, but their performances have been varied:—Little Jennie Yeamans' songs in character; Signor Casselli on the "invisible" wire; velocipede riding by "Venus" and "Adonis;" the Martens family in Tyrolean warblings and the famous "Cat Duet;" the Wilson brothers in their performances on the horizontal bar and acrobatic feats; Kynock and Smith's skating act, and the dance of the sprites, terminating with the shield tableau. The following are the novelties introduced:—Master Martens sang a Savoyard song, which won him great approval; Fox's "Wandering Minstrel," a gentleman who performed several airs in a creditable manner upon a mouth harmonicon; Mons. Marten performed solos upon a violin with artistic skill and introduced specimens of difficult trick playing. He was loudly encored. A shadow pantomime, introducing the prominent characters of the pantomime, terminated the first act; a ballet called "Dreams of Fairyland," at the commencement of the second act, was conspicuous for the graceful movements and poses of the dancers, and included a "Dance in the Air" by the Kiralfy brothers, who were elevated while dancing by means of ropes from the flies, producing a comical effect, and an alphabetical ballet, in which the dancers, by means of palm leaves, formed various figures and letters exhibiting the name of G. L. Fox. The last scene was entirely novel, instead of the usual transformation, a beautiful mazible tableau of the "Rape of the Sabines" occupied the entire width and extreme depth of the stage from the second grooves. The back of the stage, the wings, and a series of raised platforms, were covered with maroon colored cloth, and upon the platforms referred to were placed large figures of horses painted in representation marble, having upon their backs living figures, while others were posed in various artistic positions, completely filling the stage. The persons representing the statues were excellently made up, and remained so motionless that it was difficult to believe they were not marble. Several calcium lights shed their effulgence upon the scene, which greatly enhanced its effect. It was one of the most beautiful effects we ever witnessed. The attendance during the week was excellent, and the pantomime, we opine, will continue the attraction until the end of the season.

E. W. MARSTON, a popular comedian, commences an engagement at the Bowery Theatre this evening, acting in the "Beautiful Shoe-Binder of Lynn; or, New York in 1860," written by F. Connolly and E. Barry.

MISS IDA VERNON, who has been an invalid in this city for several weeks past, is convalescent, it is gratifying to be able to state, and is now prepared to enter into fresh engagements.

MRS. KATE BYRON presented her husband, Oliver Doud Byron, with a son and heir on Wednesday, April 3d; in point of fact, a young "Ben McCullough."

GEORGE CLARKE has been engaged at the Fifth Avenue Theatre for the period of three years.

"PAULINE."—We have received the following card from Miss Pauline Markham in reference to a subject alluded to in last week's CLIPPER, and we cheerfully give it a place in our paper:—

NEW YORK, April 6th, 1872.

MR. FRANK QUEEN, EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.—SIR.—I, through the medium of your paper, the acknowledged theatrical journal of America, desire to tender the thanks of a grateful woman to yourself, the editors of the Sun, the Sunday Courier, the Dispatch, Sunday Telegram, Irish American, and other papers too numerous to mention, for their noble defence of myself against the abuse to which I have been recently subjected in the Press of Philadelphia, Pa. I wish to be brief, simple, and plain in so doing, and I would state that I cannot imagine what could have given rise to such a scurrilous article, save that, perhaps, a man of such a person could be called one) may write what he pleases about a woman who positively refuses personals or suppers, as I have done. I have been sufficiently abused by private individuals through malice, because possibly I did not smile upon them or receive them as friends. I am but human, a free, good hearted, frank woman. To the public what could I say? Could I, upon my bended knees, show to the American people how grateful I am to them for the support and encouragement I have received at their hands, for their indulgent kindness to me when I have been ill, and their hearty applause, when I was even pressed by my efforts to please them, I would gladly bend to them daily. I love America dearly, for during my sojourn here I have never known an American person to insult the name of or abuse a woman. Concerning my professional abilities, I will leave the public to judge of them. The bouquets that I receive are beautiful, and I never seem to tire of encore. The bouquets that I receive are beautiful, and I never seem to tire of encore. The bouquets that I receive are beautiful, and I never seem to tire of encore. The bouquets that I receive are beautiful, and I never seem to tire of encore. My health is excellent, I am the air I breathe "exuded with birds." I never felt more competent to please, nor more healthy than at present. So please tender my thanks to the entire press, save the Philadelphia paper, and assure them I hope they may continue as well in health, as happy and contented in mind, as theirs, gratefully.

PAULINE MARKHAM.

GEO. W. MOORE, one of the proprietors of the celebrated Christy Minstrels, of St. James Hall, London, arrived in this city, per steamship, on the 3d inst. Mr. Moore visits his native city on a pleasure trip, intending to return to London in a few weeks. In his absence, Mr. Burgess, his partner, will manage the troupe. Mr. Moore has met with great success during his connection with the Christys, which troupe have given performances, without intermission, except on Sundays, for seven years. A fresh lease of St. James Hall for seventeen years has just been secured by Messrs. Moore and Burgess, and various alterations and improvements made therein. The minstrel business seems to be conducted in London in a somewhat different manner from that which prevails in this city, the Christys seating thirty-four vocalists and instrumentalists in the opening, of which they make a concert lasting nearly two hours, introducing solos, duetts and concerted pieces of a high order. The olio is not in the same favor as it is here, although that portion of the performance is by no means slighted.

THE SPANISH MINSTRELS, who have before appeared at Niblo's Garden, Mlle Cora, burlesque actress, and Welsh Edwards, comedian, who will appear in the comedietta of "Your Life's in Danger," have been added to the company at the Union Square Theatre this week. In addition, the "Nym Crinkle" galop, by the Misses Haines, Farrand, Lucille and Greenfield; Jennie Kimball in serio-comic songs, Hughey Dougherty and Master Barney in their specialties, and Gus Williams in a new Dutch sketch, will be introduced.

THE VOKES FAMILY, consisting of Messrs. Frederick and Fawdon Vokes and the Misses Victoria, Jessie and Rosina Vokes, whose specialties consist of acting, dancing, singing and acrobatic performances, and of whom the London, Eng., press speaks highly, are to make their debut at this house on April 15th. The Sunday evening concerts are continued, and on April 7th, Karl Formes, Miss Adelaide Phillipps and Miss Emma Howson, with Wormworth's band, rendered a number of selections and songs.

LINA EDWIN'S THEATRE was opened for a season under the management of Mr. Henry Greenwall, on Monday evening, April 1st. The programme presented consisted of the farce entitled "Grimshaw, Bagshaw and Bradshaw," which was fairly acted, and W. S. Gilbert's fairy comedy, entitled "Pygmalion and Galatea," a full account of which we published when it was originally produced in London, Eng. The performers were perfect in the text, and one and all labored conscientiously to give a pleasing performance, in which they were comparatively successful. During the comedy Miss Clara Fisher won an encore for a very commendable rendering of a song. Considerable new scenery had been painted, and the costumes were correct and tasteful. The following is a list of the company that performed during the week:—A. W. Albaugh, H. R. Teesdale, G. F. Ketchum, E. A. Eberle, J. F. Herne, W. J. Gilbert, Mrs. Mary Mitchell Albaugh, Mrs. E. A. Eberle, the Misses Frankie McClellan, Clara Fisher, Lillie Hall and Julia Parker. This evening, April 8th, the Misses Blanche and Ella Chapman commence an engagement, acting in the burlesque entitled "Little Don Giovanni," during the course of which the Hernandez troupe will introduce their specialties.

MISS JEAN BURNSIDE, an amateur actress, who has appeared but twice upon the dramatic stage, then playing in a single act of "Camille," is announced to make her professional debut at the Globe Theatre, rechristened the Broadway, this evening, April 8th, in a drama entitled "Gold," which will be produced with new scenery, costumes and appointments. We are informed that the auditorium has been thoroughly renovated. The drama is the joint production of Miss Burnside and a journalist of this city.

MR. TOPHAM'S BENEFIT, on Thursday afternoon, was the most notable event of the past week at the Theatre Comique, and proved a success, the auditorium being crowded in every part. The chief feature of the entertainment were announced to consist of a burlesque entitled "Black Eyed Susan," in which the three Worrell sisters are to take prominent characters; an Ethiopian sketch called "Swamp Angels; The Adventures of the Herald Correspondent," and a local sketch called "Noll, the Newsboy; or, Lost in the Streets." Miss Ella Wesner is underlined to commence an engagement on April 15th.

SIGNOR PAPPO is announced to receive a complimentary testimonial concert at Steinway Hall on April 13th.

THE PANORAMA to be exhibited in Josh Hart's sensation entitled "Chicago; Before, After and During the Fire," was exhibited before an assembly of invited guests at Armory Hall, over the Centre street market, on Friday afternoon.

FRANK LAWLOR, manager of the Academy of Music, Chicago,

gra opens here on April 8th, as Lord Dundreary.....At Rankin's, 'St. Louis As It Is' has continued during the week with but slight changes, excepting in the business at the box office, which has somewhat improved since its first production. The termination of the present week puts 'St. Louis As It Is' upon the shelf. 'School' will be produced April 8th. An entirely new comedy, written expressly for Miss Blanchard, entitled 'The American Baron,' is announced as being in rehearsal."

CONCERNING MATTERS THEATRICAL in Washington, D. C., our correspondent, under date of April 2th, writes as follows:—"At the National Theatre, Mrs. James A. Oates and her troupe have given a series of performances, which, although announced as comic opera, trod much nearer on the heels of burlesque. The power of fascination which this wonderful little creature possesses, is as potent as when she was last here and as unexplainable as it is undeniable. Her voice is clear, strong, and piercing, and denotes a pair of lungs in her petite body which would do credit to the elephant Romeo. The support which she received was in the main above the average. The opening bill on April 1st, was the extravaganza of 'Fortunio, and his Seven Gifted Servants.' The character of Fortunio was assumed by Mrs. Oates, and was the principal feature. During the week the 'Flower Girl of Paris,' 'Little Faust' and the 'Prima Donna of a Night,' were presented. Mrs. Oates remains one week longer and appears on April 8th, in 'The Fair One with the Blonde Wig.' Business was very good during the past week, the house being well filled every night."

AT THE PROVIDENCE, R. I., OPERA HOUSE, "Jessie Brown" was produced on April 1st, with fine scenery and appointments. Our correspondent, writing on April 6th, states that 'Ettie Henderson assumed the part of Jessie Brown in a creditable manner, and the stock company received excellent support. Previous to the drama the farce of the 'Rough Diamond' was played, Mr. Sheldon and Miss Monk performing the part of Cousin Joe and Margery in a style that was very diverting to the audience. On the 5th, 'School' was produced with elaborate scenery, fine costumes and a strong cast. Mrs. Henderson's Naomi Tighe is the most popular and pleasing personation she has given during her engagement. Miss Dumeron as Bella won much admiration, and, in her elegant costume, as the bride of Lord Beaufoy, she never looked better. The parts of the other school girls were well sustained by the Misses Harris, Doyle, Mabel, Stanfield, Rainsford, Naomie and little Hattie. Miss Doyle deserves special credit for her spirited personation of Milly. Miss Preston made up and acted Mrs. Sutcliffe satisfactorily. The Messrs. Burroughs and Bascomb were at home in the parts of Jack Poynts and Lord Beaufoy respectively, and Mr. Rainford's Bear Farintosh was a very clever and finished performance. Mr. Donaldson as Dr. Sutcliffe, and Mr. Sheldon as Dr. Knox, were careful and painstaking. There was a little episode at this theatre on the 2d, which has occasioned some gossip. A foolish report, to the effect that Manager Henderson obstructed the delivery of a basket of flowers to Miss Cameron on the evening of the 2d, was the cause of that lady being deluged with bouquets on the following evening. It seems hardly necessary to contradict this report, as Miss Cameron, as well as with the rest of his company, are of a most pleasant nature. The blame rests with Mr. Von Olker, leader of the orchestra, who should have found an opportunity to hand up the floral offering (which he did not do) notwithstanding it came in late and in the midst of difficult music. Business has hardly been up to the average this week. 'Madame Sans Gene,' 'Lucia' and 'Love's Labor Lost' are announced for the coming week."

MISS MARIETTA RAVEL commenced a six nights' engagement at the Royal Lyceum, Toronto, Ont., on April 1st. Our correspondent, writing on April 4th, says:—"She opened in the 'French Spy,' playing the leading rôle. She is the most accomplished pantomimist that has appeared in Toronto. Every gesture and look impart their meaning as plainly as words could imply. She is also an excellent dancer. Her support was rather weak, with one or two exceptions, those being the Tony Bavard of Harry Lindley and Mohamet of Pat Sullivan, both of which were excellently well done. The 'French Spy' was only announced for the opening night, but in consequence of its success it held the boards until Friday evening, when, for her benefit, the 'Wizard Skiff' and the 'Dumb Boy of Manchester' were produced. Saturday evening, to close her engagement, the same bill was repeated. The receipts for the week have been larger than for any week during the season. Miss Ravel opens in Buffalo on the 9th. Her agent, Mart. W. Hanley, has, by his gentlemanly and courteous manner, made hosts of friends during his stay here. On April 8th 'Inshavogue' will be produced."

DAVIS & CO., theatrical agents, Cincinnati, O., whose card is in another column, want three dramatic companies and several artists in different branches of the profession.

AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Buffalo, N. Y., on Monday evening, April 1st, wrote our correspondent on April 6th:—"Miss Amelia Waugh, leading lady, presented her claims to the public on the occasion of her first benefit. A dramatization of Wilkie Collins' 'Terrible Temptation,' and the farce of the 'Widow's Victim' comprised the bill. The attendance was quite large and the fair lady actually acquitted herself creditably, receiving fine support from the principal members of the stock. Miss Ada Gray, an utter stranger to our boards, made her entree on the following evening, as Camille, in the play of that name. Miss Gray is of decidedly stout figure, but has pleasing features and a clear, resonant voice. She invested the character of the fair but frail Frenchwoman with a sufficient degree of correctness and pathos; but she erra in attempting the rendition of such parts, her adipose figure not harmonizing with the author's conception of the consumptive heroine. Mr. Mordaunt as Armand Duval, Mr. Wright and a few others, rendered good support. On Wednesday evening, 3d, a new play entitled 'Leonie; or, Love Wins,' was produced for the first time in this city, Miss Gray in the title role. While we are forced to condemn the piece as being shallow in plot and strongly unnatural and improbable in situation, we would heartily commend the efforts of Miss Gray and the leading members of the company, who exerted their best efforts and made interesting what, in less capable hands, would have been a decided failure. Miss Gray evinced talents of a high order in the fourth act, worthy of a better fate. In the interview with Marquand, her display of indignation and contempt was most powerfully rendered, and called forth tremendous applause. The Captain Duverger of Mr. Mordaunt was enacted with the uniform correctness and distinct enunciation of that gentleman. Mr. Wright, as Bernard St. Cyr, had little to do, but that little received full justice at his hands. Mr. Wright improves rapidly and is destined to fill a high position in the histrionic ranks. Mr. Haviland was quite acceptable as General St. Cyr. The character of Marquand, by Mr. Gray, although fairly rendered, was overdone in the final scene. Mr. Goodrich, as Delame, we regret to state, required repeated prompting. The part of Pierre, assigned to Mr. Rogers, was invested with the usual comicality of that gentleman. After a two nights' run 'Leonie' was shelved, and 'Love's Sacrifice,' with Miss Gray as Margaret Elmore, was produced on Friday evening. In this character the lady surpassed her previous efforts, and delighted her auditors with a fine display of elocution. Excellent support was given her by Messrs, Mordaunt, Wright and Haviland. For Saturday's matinee 'Leonie' was repeated, and Miss Gray concludes her engagement this evening, appearing in the 'Colleen Bawn' and 'Katherine and Petruchio.' The attendance during the week was fair. On Monday evening, the 8th, Mr. Mortimer Wright, a most deserving member of the company, will receive a benefit, when will be produced 'Under a Cloud; or, From Ocean to Ocean,' a dramatization of Bartley Campbell's story, and a favorite farce. Mr. Wright is a careful and painstaking actor, and is worthy the encouragement of an appreciative public. Miss Marietta Ravel opens on Tuesday evening, the 9th, in the 'French Spy,' followed by her specialty of 'Wildcat' on the succeeding evenings of the week. Mrs. Bowers will probably succeed Miss Ravel, though positive arrangements are not yet concluded."

JUNIUS BRUTUS BOOTH, supported by his wife, L. R. Shewell, and a dramatic company, opened for two nights at the Theatre, Richmond, Va., April 1st, to fair houses. Our correspondent, writing on April 6th, says:—"The name of Booth was sufficient to fill the house, which proved a financial triumph to one, but to the large audience assembled a disappointment indeed. Mr. J. B. Booth lacks the talent which the whole family inherit. We have never seen a worse rendition of 'Hamlet' on any stage, his conception of that character being very faulty. Mrs. Booth—a very attractive looking lady—as Ophelia, was unexceptionable. L. R. Shewell, as the Ghost, and the Laertes of H. W. Mitchell, were most satisfactory. The rest of the support was passable, but did not come up to the expectations of the audience. On Tuesday, 'Othello' was put on, with J. B. Booth as Iago. As Iago, Mr. Booth appeared to better advantage; at times he was good, at others bad. Mrs. Booth acquitted herself satisfactorily as Desdemona, and Mrs. S. K. Chester, as Amelia, with the exception of having a rather bad voice, exhibited some fine qualities as an actress. The Othello of Mr. Shewell was all that could be desired. H. W. Mitchell, as Cassio, and the Roderigo of Geo. Howard were acceptable. The engagement proved a financial, but not an artistic success. During the performance Mr. W. T. Powell, the manager of the theatre, met with a painful accident. His foot caught in the matting of the stairway, as he was descending from the dress circle, and he fell head-foremost to the bottom. One of his wrists was dislocated, and he was otherwise badly cut and bruised. We are happy to state that, though his injuries are severe, they are not serious."

MR. MOSES J. STRAUSS, for some years our correspondent at Troy, N. Y., is about to lead to the altar an Albany belle.

FELIX A. VINCENT, supported by the New York and Western Dramatic Company, performed during the past week at Urbana, O.

FROM SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., our correspondent, writing on April 1st, sends the following report of amusements in that city, and on the Pacific slope:—"The Metropolitan Theatre opened for one night the past week, for the benefit of Mrs. C. Anderson, a former member of manager Proctor's dramatic company. The entertainment consisted of the drama of the 'Colleen Bawn,' in which Mrs. Anderson appeared as Elly O'Connor, and singing by Miss Belle Chapman. There was a large audience present. The regular spring season at this theatre begins on April 3d, under the management of Joseph Proctor. Charles Wheatleigh begins an engagement at that time, and will be supported by Miss Sallie Hunter, leading lady. The plays announced for the first night's performance are 'A Victim of Circumstances,' and the 'Debutante.' Mrs. Jennie Reinarth, a popular German actress, takes a benefit to-night. Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Bates are announced to make their last appearance on this occasion, prior to their departure for the east.....Bianchi's Italian Opera Troupe performed at Towatoc's San Jose on Tuesday, March 26th. It was a grand success. Our Italian theatricals do not seem to flourish very well. Manager John Maguire has left the Academy of Music, and is to have a benefit at Brayton Hall to night. Harry Sinclair had a benefit at the Academy Saturday night, on which occasion Sallie Hinckley, Owen Marlowe and others appeared, having volunteered their services. The Lancashire Bell Ringers are giving concerts in the country of late.....Marryville rejoices in an amateur dramatic company, and two amateur minstrel troupes who travel about and are said to be making money.....Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nevada, continues in full blast, with Amelia Dean's troupe of male and female minstrels. Aline Le Favre and Johnny Manning commence an engagement this week.....Geo. W. Aldron closed his successful season at the Fino Theatre, Portland, Oregon, last week, and has taken his company to Salem.....Hochgurtel, the lessee of the Theatre Comique in Portland, has been doing a good business. His company are to appear at Victoria for a season of two weeks, and on their return to Portland a new season will be inaugurated.....Manager Joseph Proctor has secured the control of the new theatre in Sacramento, and will play Wheatleigh there on or about the 10th inst.....The local company give occasional performances at the Salt Lake City Theatre. The last entertainment was given March 23d, and consisted of 'Camilla's Husband.'.....A theatre is being built at Reno, Nevada, and will soon be ready for performances.....Miss Fanny Morgan Phelps is performing at the Denver City (Col. Ter.) Theatre. Ralph Phelps, her husband, is the manager of the institution.....W. J. Coggswell, late of Manager Proctor's company, of this city, has been engaged by Manager Bert, of the Metropolitan Theatre, San Francisco, and will appear in that city at the commencement of the Lotta season..... Walter W. Leman will be a member of the California Theatre (S. F.) company next season.....W. C. Crosbie will shortly leave for the east."

THE ONLY NEW FACES at Fox's American Theatre, Philadelphia, during the past week, were those of the Clair Sisters, who appeared in the "Hungarian Polka," and afterwards displayed much flexibility while going through some evolutions in a clever contortion act. Frank Wood, who was also announced for last week, failed to put in an appearance. The programme was brought to a merry conclusion by the burlesque of "Pocahontas," in which principal characters were sustained by the Lisa Weber Troupe with much effect. On the 8th inst., the "Black Crook" combination, from Niblo's Garden, including M'lle Sassi, Signor De Costa and ballet corps, and Prof. Samwell, with his trained animals, will open at this theatre. A new extravaganza entitled "Dolly Varden" will be produced, and the Lisa Weber Troupe will appear for the first time at this theatre, in the burlesque of "Orpheus and Eurydice." Business has been excellent during the week, especially on Monday, Wednesday and Friday nights (ladies' nights) and the matinee on Wednesday, the 3d, was one of the best attended of any ever given here.

MR. BARTLEY CAMPBELL'S drama of "Through Fire" attracted fair audiences during the second and last week of its representation at the Arch Street Theatre, Philadelphia. On the 5th, the occasion of Mr. Campbell's benefit, the laughable farce of "Of that Blessed Baby," and Barton Hill's recitation of "That Baby in Tuscaloo," in addition to the drama "Through Fire," completed a programme that attracted a flattering attendance. This week will be mainly devoted to benefits.

AT THE WALNUT STREET THEATRE, Philadelphia, Mr. Edwin Booth concluded his second week on the 6th inst. His engagement terminates on the 20th inst. Mrs. John A. Oates' Comic Opera Troupe commences a one month's engagement at this theatre on the 22d inst. The stock members of this company purpose having a joint benefit at the Academy of Music, in that city, on the 27th of April, and then start out on a starring tour.

MISS LYDIA THOMPSON was recently presented with a bale of cotton weighing 1,148 lbs., by the citizens of Savannah, Ga., and the Advertiser publishes the following notice of the affair:—

Quite a notable incident at the theatre last evening was the presentation of a bale of cotton to Miss Lydia Thompson. Near the close of the performance the delicate little testimonial was suddenly wheeled upon the stage, and the gentleman through whom the presentation was made, a young attorney of this city, stepped promptly from behind the scenes, and in a highly complimentary speech (the thread of which, however, we were unable to catch from our position) tendered the staple to Miss Lydia as a testimonial to worth and virtue from several citizens of Savannah. In graceful acknowledgment the fair recipient acknowledged herself no speaker, but on this occasion the world indeed be ungrateful did she not attempt to express her feelings toward that country where she had received so much kindness. "This token," she remarked, "is too large to be worn as a bracelet or watch chain, but I shall ever hold it in remembrance, for in every sense of the word it is the greatest testimonial I have ever received." This little speech was received with great applause, during which the piece Beckett, with most sober mien, escorted the presentor behind the scenes again, and the play went on. The cotton was pronounced by judges first class, and the bale was prettily trimmed with blue and scarlet ribbons and flowers. The gift is certainly a novel one, and the question arises, what will she do with it?.....As a report, we may here mention that Miss Thompson, during her recent engagement, has realized the handsome sum of $3,000, which was sent by sight exchange for deposit in New York yesterday.

MR. JOHN E. OWENS commenced an engagement at Ford's Opera House, Baltimore, on the 1st, and despite the strong counter attractions, writes our correspondent, he has had a succession of good audiences. Next (this) week will be devoted to the production of standard old comedies, including 'The Poor Gentleman'.....'Buffalo Bill' was produced at the Holliday Street Theatre on April 1st, and has been drawing good houses. Matinees were given on Wednesday and Saturday. On the 8th 'The Streets of New York' will be brought out, with Mr. Theo. Hamilton in the cast. Additional attractiveness will be lent to the programme by the specialties of J. H. Budworth and the Mathews Family, who open at the same time."

MANAGERS are referred to press notices in another column, which speak in eulogistic terms of the acting of Geo. Morton.

MISS MAGGIE MITCHELL is announced to play in "Little Barefoot" and the "Pearl of Savoy" at Providence, R. I., under the management of B. F. Lowell, on April 8th and 9th.

MISS FANNY E. PRICE will commence an engagement of six nights at the Opera House, Terre Haute, Ind., on April 15th.

THE SEVENTH STREET THEATRE, Philadelphia, is now known as the German Stadt Theatre, and the excellent dramatic company there engaged have succeeded in attracting fair houses during the week ending April 6th.

EDWIN FORREST'S serious indisposition continues, is an item of sad news from Boston, Mass., but symptoms induce hopes for his recovery, though his re-appearance on the stage is not soon expected.

Musical.

P. S. ALLEUP, violinist and solo alto player, whose address and circular, wants an engagement.

THE BERGER FAMILY of Swiss Bell Ringers and Sol. Smith Russell, humorist, commenced an engagement of four nights at the Theatre, Richmond, Va., on April 3d. In addition to the gold cornet, by Mlle. Ana Berger, was rendered in an artistic manner. The ballads of Miss Nellie Knapp were pleasing. The staff bell solo of Miss Henrietta Berger was excellent, much skill being exhibited in her performance. Sol. Smith Russell, in his character songs, impersonations and facial delineations, was as humorous as ever. The impersonation of the School Boy is the most laughable and among the best he does. The company will give the tableaux Saturday, and will close the 6th, on which occasion Mr. Russell has been tendered a complimentary benefit by the Knights of Pythias, who are under obligations to him for kindness shown when on a former visit. So wrote our correspondent on April 5th.

THE TYROLEAN OPERA TROUPE, together with Prof. Fahey's talking machine, gave two performances in Springfield, Ill., on the 1st and 2d inst. The singing of the different members of the troupe was very fine, while the music by Prof. Hahn on the twenty-four wine glasses and the wood and straw was wonderful. The violin playing of Mr. J. K. Bloom was excellent. The wonderful talking machine was the main attraction with the company, and it is most certainly a marvelous piece of mechanism, speaking almost as plain as a human being any word that may be chosen by the audience. The company went from that city to Decatur for two nights.

THE FISK JUBILEE SINGERS are credited with having deposited over $12,000 in bank towards their proposed $20,000 fund for their university.

BLIND TOM concertised at the Mercantile Library, St. Louis, Mo., on the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th and 6th inst.

OLE BULL and his concert troupe are billed to perform at Kansas City, Mo., April 8th; St. Louis, Mo., 10th.

HENRY OPPER, second violinist and alto player, advertises for an engagement.

A MUSICAL MENGERADA is the following effect has been sent us by our correspondent:—"A. P. Peck's benefit concert, on Wednesday evening, 3d inst., at Boston, Mass., went off like a charm to a large audience. Castle, Campbell, Jenny Van Zandt, Mrs. Seguin, Marie Krebs and Theodore Thomas' orchestra formed the attraction.....Carl Zerrahn's benefit occurs on the 10th, when 'Egmont' will be given by the Harvard Symphony Orchestra, together with Charlotte Cushman and Mrs. J. D. Weston..... Rosa D'Erina has left the Fremont Temple Company this week, drawing excellent houses.....The Pisk University Singers, having met with success, return next week and give two more entertainments in Tremont Temple..... A mass rehearsal for the World's Jubilee will be held on Tuesday, in Music Hall, under the leadship of Carl Zerrahn."

MLLE NILSSON commenced a four nights' engagement in Italian Opera, at the Concordia Opera House, Baltimore, on April 1st. On Monday night, "Lucia di Lamermoor" was presented; Tuesdy, "Faust;" Wednesday, "Fra Diavolo;" Thursday, "Mignon." Miss Nilsson was not in the cast of "Fra Diavolo." The first two nights the attendance was fair; the third, very slim. The management ought to have learned by this time that extortionate prices will not draw, as the fact of Mlle. Carpoul, the far-famed French tenor, the public were disappointed. He has been extravagantly overrated. When singing forte, and in the higher notes of the upper register, his voice becomes uncertain, and his strained efforts are really painful to witness. In neither sweetness, power, range, nor training, is he worthy even of a comparison with Wachtel. M. Jauet's acting of Mephisto was very clever and he has a good voice, but, bah-well, we have heard Hermanns. So writes our correspondent.

SOME of the members of the Parepa Rosa opera company, including Mrs. Van Zandt, Mrs Seguin, Mr. Castle, Mr. Campbell and Mr. Stratfort, are announced to give a concert at the Masonic Temple, Baltimore, on April 9th.

THE STRAKOSCH GRAND OPERA COMPANY present their solitary star, Nilsson, with their mockery corps of assisting singers, at the Brooklyn Academy on the 11th and 12th, in "Martha" and "Hamlet," the latter an opera of one act, one scene, and one character.

PHRENOLOGICAL WALTZES are among the latest musical publications issued from the house of J. L. Peters, New York. They are composed and arranged by J. Jay Watson.

THE HOLMAN OPERA TROUPE have been performing before large audiences in Montreal, C. E., during the past week. They opened on April 1st in the "Enchantress," and later in the week produced "La Perichole" and the "Grand Duchess."

HARRY THOROGOOD, flute and picolo player, advertises for an engagement.

MISS VIENNA DEMOREST shortly starts on a concert tour through the west. She will be assisted by James M. Wehli, pianist; McDonald, tenor; Royal Keith, basso; George W. Colby conductor and musical director, and C. Antony Bruce advance agent.

A FLUTE AND PICOLO PLAYER, a B flat cornetist and a good tenor balladist, are wanted for Duprez and Benedict's Minstrels. Address as per advertisements.

A CONCERT TROUPE, under the proprietorship of Messrs. Bristel and Beckler, with the following people in the company:—Chas. Coriell, baritone singer and manager; Prof. Jas. Speaight, leader of orchestra; Miss L. A. Stevenson, soprano; Miss Thomas, pianiste; Chas. Coriell, soprano; F. H. Stout, tenor, and Master Jas. Speaight, child violinist, are traveling through Colorado towards California. They gave concerts at Georgetown on March 30th and April 1st; Sharon, 2d and 3d, and Golden Gate, 4th and 5th.

A BAND of six pieces is wanted for Van's Olympic Show. See advertisement.

THE ALLEGANIANS, Swiss bell ringers and vocalists, performed at Stockton-on-Tees, Eng., March 18th.

Variety Halls.

THE SAD AND MOURNFUL DUTY of accompanying to their last resting place the remains of a dearly beloved comrade was assigned the members of the variety profession on Friday, March 29th, when all were called upon to pay the last tribute of respect to one who, for a youth, held by his ability as a performer a high rank in the profession of his choice. Master Pete Conners, the associate of the comedian, James Bradley, now at the Theatre Comique, died at his residence, No 43 Elm street, on Wednesday, the 27th ult., of consumption, and although his comrades were greatly surprised at the suddenness of a shock which has cast a decided gloom over them, yet it was evident to those who were directly associated with him that the constitution of the once noble lad had terribly wasted, and the question of his life's duration was but a matter of time. Let it be made known, to the credit of the variety profession, that numbers of its most brilliant lights flocked to the bier of their departed friend, and by their since demonstrations of their love for one who was deservedly regarded as one of the most promising juveniles that has graced the ranks of minstrelsy for many a year. Prominent among the mourners was noticed Dody Pastor, Frank Kerns, his surviving partner James Bradley, Charley Foley, John Meyers, John Rannells and others. Deceased was in his nineteenth year. His funeral cortege numbered over thirty carriages. His remains were interred in Calvary Cemetery.

"TO HIS MEMORY."

Sad is the day! so big with dire annoy
To me and all that loved that darling boy.
My friend and comrade, in whom winning grace,
With sweetest smiles, shone in his beauty face,
Has been consigned to death's unceasing gloom,
And now lies mouldering in the dismal tomb;
No more, as wont, while joyous passing by
I'll meet his smiles, his cheering greeting eye;
No more, alas! to hail me with a smile,
Nor prattling voice my every care beguile;
With kindred dust his dear, dear ashes rest—
Light lie the turf upon the lad at best.

His mother dreamt to see revolving time
Hand up her boy to manhood's joyous prime,
But ere the setting of his eighteenth sun
That darling one on earth his race had done;
Yet mourn not, mother, that thy son has gone—
Though much you grieve, you suffer not alone—
Two loving sisters join in sorrow's wail,
Which time may not assuage but never heal;
Assign to me within your sorrowing group
Some loving spot wherein exisiting hope
Shall bid me look to that auspicious clime,
And greet my darling beyond the bourne of time.

Farewell, dear friend, the days will come and go,
And I on thee will ever thought bestow;
I'll dream of scenes wherein we each took part,
And gladsome make when heart to heart to heart;
The time must come when I shall bid adieu
To all I love and all on earth I view;
But, happy moment, 'twill to me restore
My darling friend, from whom we'll be no more
And, as on earth, thy friendship to me given,
The same, revered, extend to me in Heaven.
In home resplendent, happiness to dwell,
Where never more I'll use the word farewell!

JOSEPH AUSTIN LEONARD.

HARRY STANWOOD, banjoist and comedian, at present at the Alhambra Theatre, San Francisco, Cal., is favorably noticed by the press of that city, as will be seen by an extract in another column.

E. D. DAVIES, ventriloquist, commences an engagement at the Fifth Avenue Opera House, Pittsburgh, Pa., on April 15th, and not at Trimble's Varieties, as stated in our last issue.

FRED. D. HARRIS, motto and character singer, is at present performing at Deagle's Varieties, St. Louis, Mo.

THE RETURN OF the Walnut Street Theatre Company to Kansas City, March 25th, on their successful tour through Illinois and Missouri, was the occasion of a goodly filled house, although the weather was very disagreeable. All the old favorites in their specialties, together with Frank Jones, late of Purdy, Scott and Fostelle's Minstrels, who is doing the "Lively Mole," were well received. A very good bill is on this week, commencing with the farce of "A Dead Shot," in which George F. McDonald, E. F. Gorman and Frank Laughlin, Mrs. Frank McDonald and Mlle. Aubrey take part, after which Lizzie Florence tickles the audience with her songs of the period, then Ventini and Mlle. Zuiella perform on the trapeze. Ed. Murray sings comic songs, after which the little favorite, Louisa Boshell, appears on the slack wire. The two Johnnys, Redden and Pierce, in their confliction, in which good singing, while the hat spinning of the Ventinis, the songs and dances of the Misses Star and Florence, and the Medley Dance of Miss Boshell, receive a good share of applause. The entertainment concluded with Andy Morris and Ventini troupe in "A Day's Fishing," a very amusing pantomime. So wrote our correspondent on April 3d.

THE OPENING of hundreds of lumbermen, who have been housed in the woods during the winter, made business at Tammany Hall, Bay City, Mich., lively during the past week. Among the new faces were Miss Kate Brooks, vocalist; Miss Molly Macy, banjo soloist and serio-comic singer; Willis Armstrong, Chinese juggler, and Master George, juvenile vocalist and clog dancer, who acquits himself in a manner that would reflect credit on older and more experienced professionals. One of the best features of the entertainment is the performance of Kate Barrows, a beautiful as well as graceful danseuse. She closes her engagement here June 14th. Tony Harvey, negro delineator, closes on the same date. Belle Herd closes April 13th, and goes to Grand Rapids. Billy Devere—an old favorite—is to open April 15th; Alf Miles and Victoria Rose, on the 12th inst. Joe Elliott has purchased the interest of the Munn Family, and is now sole proprietor. He has been in the business some years, and merits success. So wrote our correspondent on April 5th.

ANNA FLORENCE, jig dancer and comic vocalist, advertises that she can be engaged.

ARTISTS and traveling companies can fill up time at Spencer's Opera House, Parker's Landing, Pa., by addressing as per card in another column.

THE HANLON BROTHERS, who have been performing in Cuba and the West India islands during the past winter, sailed during the latter part of March from St. Thomas for England.

AT BIJOU'S OPERA HOUSE, Memphis, Tenn., Castelotti appeared on April 1st before a crowded house. His performances on the ladder were enthusiastically cheered. Annie Hindle has won for herself a degree of popularity in that city seldom acquired by any vocalist. Her songs and changes are always heartily encored. Miss Nellie Zegrino is making a host of friends and admirers. Mr. Chas. L. Davis is attaining great popularity as a comedian and song and dance man. During the performance on Monday night, Manager White stepped before the footlights and caned Mr. Jno. L. Davis, at the instigation of Manager Broom. The cane used on this occasion was one of the handsomest we have ever seen, costing about $125. Mr. Davis acknowledged the compliment very gracefully, but the audience thought Broom had "gone the limit." So writes our correspondent on April 3d.

AT BERRY'S THEATRE COMIQUE, Wilkesbarre, Pa., Orville Pitcher and Joe Allen, Ethiopian comedians and song and dance men, are announced to appear on April 8th. James Fish has been engaged as leader of the orchestra.

CINCINNATI VARIETY NEWS is furnished by our correspondent, up to the 8th, as follows:—"The National will finish out the week as a variety theatre, after which a circus diversion, on Monday, 8th. The company will embrace Charley Howard, Charley Brown, Keegan and Clark, Lew Spencer, Turner and Lester, J. A. Kelly, Oscar Willis, Mlle. Henriletta, Lisie Riddell, and probably others. The Great Eastern Circus has done a fine business there this week.....At the Race Street Theatre, Sally Eldridge, Emma Devere, Phil Gibbons, John Foster and F. H. Seamon wound up last week, the three latter joining Circusse, and the ladies going with the 'Humpty Dumpty' party, mentioned in last week's CLIPPER. Johnny McVeigh, a good comedian and song and dance man, commenced on Monday. Last night (Thursday) George Morton, banjoist and Ethiopian comedian, and Miss Lou Flassmer, who sings ballads, were added to the company. Before the 'Van-eau, several farces by McVeigh, Marsh Adams, Morton and Finley, and the ballads of Lottie Georgia and la belle Helene, have been the main attractions. Business is very fair, but the company needs strengthening.....At the Pacific the usual flow of patronage continues. J. W. Ward closed last week, and is playing this week with the great Eastern Circus, at the National. Nellie Georgia also closed last week. Johnny Max, Ethiopian and Dutch comique, opened on Monday. Harry Watson and Lizzie Sherman wind up this week, starting out with Cooper's Circus on the 6th. J. W. Ward also tents with Cooper's.....At the Olympic, Charley Benedict, Annie Watson and Maggie Archer wound up on Monday, and departed for St. Louis. Nellie Georgia commenced last night. Kate Hunter, in her sisters, Clara Whitman's dances, and the comicalities of M. A. Grimn and Tom Clanton are the "main holts" here. Clannon joins John Robinson's circus on Monday..... The Davenport Brothers, and Hudley and Middeford's Minstrels, are to give an entertainment at Mozart Hall on Monday.....At the Vine Street Varieties, Jim Jackson, comedian, opened this week. Johnny Richardson, Harry Wilkinson, Dave O'Brien, Annie Gibbons, Laura Delano, Georgie May and Little Mamy May still remain. Lizzie Jackson is to open on Monday. Business moderate."

BEAGLE'S VARIETIES, St. Louis, Mo., offered new attractions in the first appearance on Monday night, April 1st, of Miss Kathleen O'Neil, who, in her characteristic Irish songs, was good, particularly in her original song of Kitty from Dublin. Bridget Mulrooney, the new one the same night Miss Lizzie Shelton, vocalist, met with a good reception. The Freeman Sisters, Susie and Lizzie, Sallie Mason, and Wallace and Walsh, are still among the list of stars. On Sunday night, 6th, Messrs. Hughes and Norton, double song and dance men, were engaged to appear..... At Allen's no additional farces are announced for the present week, the present distribution of talent being deemed sufficient to satisfy for a time the visitors' demands. The Henri family are in themselves a show, consisting of Prof. Henri, Master Tommy, Master Charley and La belle Flora. Master Tommy and La belle Flora, in their double song and dance, deserve especial mention. Tommy throws himself over the stage in a manner that would put some of the adults in the shade. On the 8th Miss Kitty Henderson will make her debut. Miss Daley and Master Warren Williams assisting as volunteers.....At the Sixth Street Varieties the new appearances are M'lle Forest, vocalist; Prof. Otto, Edith Dot and Billy Morningstar.

AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Richmond, Va., business remains about the same. The hall is now undergoing thorough repairs, and Mr. Whiting, scenic artist, has been well received. The Hawley Brothers, song and dance men, are immense in their line. Den Howe, Tim Morris and the rest of the company remain as popular as ever.

WILL B. WILD, comedian and end man, can be addressed as per advertisement.

AT THE METROPOLITAN THEATRE, Springfield, Ill., business has been on the increase during the week past. On Tuesday evening, 3d, Masters Scott and Wheeler, song and dance, closed their engagement, to open at Dubuque. Jennie St. Clair has continued to please in her character songs. She closes on the 6th. Billy Pash, in his different acts, is immense, and on his banjo he continues to make friends. He closes his engagement also on the 6th, as does Miss Mirande. Maude Lewis and Mattie Seymour continue fair in their several acts, but a change of lady faces would add to the attractions of the hall. Curtis Hills gives a very excellent bone solo each evening, and continues to bring down the house in his doleful sayings. Curtis fills the position of interlocutor with credit. On Wednesday evening, 3d, Billy Butler made his appearance, and does a very clever song and dance. New stars are underlined to appear. So reports our correspondent.

THE VICTORELLIS, three in number, trapeze performers, and Tommy Winnett, were the arrivals at the Theatre Comique, Cleveland, O., April 1st. Gus. Peters and Mlle. Amelia had a joint benefit on the 5th and closed on the 6th. The "White Fawn" held the boards all the week, and continued to attract large houses. It was to be withdrawn after the 6th.

MISS LOTTIE MITCHELL drew large audiences at the Academy of Music, Galveston, Texas, the first three nights of the past week, appearing in a fancy jig dance, in addition to her serio-comic songs. March 28th, M'lle Mayer and G. W. Malmborg made their first appearance. Mlle. Devoe's comic selections were favorably accepted, while Ad. Yails' new Irish burlesques were very good. In a scene called "Sublime and Ridiculous," Tom Worfield and Walter Bray were extremely witty, and succeeded in getting several rounds of applause. Business has been big. So wrote our correspondent on March 30th.

BUCKLEY'S OPERA HOUSE, Saginaw City, Mich, is in a flourishing condition. Miss Ada St. Clair, change artist, and Ned Reed, Ethiopian delineator, opened on April 1st. Johnny Bucklin and Miss May Allentia received a warm reception, and are nightly encored. Mr. Joe Cole, the former sisters, Master Tommy Walters and Tommy Jefferson comprise the company. Jefferson is stage manager and Alfred H. Roberts assistant. The new Theatre Comique was opened by Messrs. Purdy and Wing on April 4th, with the following company:—J. M. Monroe, stage manager; Miss Maude Le Moine, vocalist, danseuse and actress; Miss Clara A. St. Clair, vocalist; Miss Lena Clark, serio-comic vocalist; Frank Edwards, jig, song and dance; Master Eddie, the child wonder and change artist; Frank Walters, banjoist, and Master Phinney, song and dance. Music is furnished by Nunn Brothers' orchestra. Maude Le Moine is a great favorite here.

AT SMITH'S OPERA HOUSE, East Saginaw, Mich., the only change announced is the appearance of Clara May on April 10th. Mr. Charles Walters, a favorite and an excellent man in his business, goes to Welch's, at Detroit, on the 10th. Miss Emma Whiting, Miss Bertha Foy, Miss Molly Somers, Billy Gray and Johnny Smith sing in the first part. In the olio Miss Annie Harrison appeared in a very pretty dance. The Foy Sisters, in their specialties, create considerable enthusiasm. Miss Molly Somers in song and dance, and Peasly and Fitzgerald, in their double song and dance, bring down the house. Miss Nellie Clark, in her Indian club exercise, is excellent. Miss Emma Whiting appeared in the Sanyeaha Hooch dance with success. The Sanyeahs in their gymnastic feats and double trapeze acts are very much admired. Mr. J. H. Rogers, actor, appeared and took the audience by storm. The programme closed with a local sketch entitled the "Working Girls of Saginaw," written by Mr. Gray.

AT THE WASHINGTON VARIETIES, Providence, R. I., the fresh attractions on April 1st were Bobby Daly and Fanny Morrell. Andy and Alida Showers also appeared and had a warm reception. The programme for the week commencing April 8th, will open with a minstrel performance, with Lew Brimmer as bones, Harry Miller as Tambo, and J. E. Carton as middle-man. Business has been unusually good. Jule Keen closed on the 6th. Kittie Sharpe has a benefit on the 12th, when extraordinary attractions will be presented. Manona Stanley and Hopkins will, on the 15th, send out a company under the name of Brimmer's Combination, to give variety performances in the neighboring cities.

THE LA VERDE CHILDREN, three in number, whose ages range from five to eleven years, song and dance performers, character dancers and vocalists, can be engaged after April 15th, through their agent, Col. T. A. Brown. W. E. Sinn speaks highly of them in a card in another column.

A. L. COOKE advertises for a partner with capital to join him in the management of a traveling variety company.

E. D. DAVIES, ventriloquist, requests that all business letters be addressed as per card in another column.

LOUIS A GILBERT is requested to send her address to Dan Shelby, who advertises.

ARTISTS are wanted for Spencer's Opera House, Parker's Landing, Pa. Address as per card elsewhere.

CHAS. HAMMOND advertises for ladies for a female minstrel troupe.

AT HARRINGTON'S OPERA HOUSE, Providence, R. I., a combination called the "Union Square Theatre Company" performed during the past week to full houses. The programme has been a very extensive one, and combined variety with merit in a pleasing manner. The Mathews Family as acrobats, gymnasts, vocal and instrumental performers, were very successful in their various acts. Hughey Dougherty was a host in himself. One of the best features of the perform ance was the quadrille by the "Zig Zags," while the trained dogs, the Spanish Minstrels, and Wm. Ashcroft's specialties, added much to the interest of the performance.

AT SINN'S FRONT STREET THEATRE, Baltimore, the new arrivals on April 1st were Pattie Stewart, Prof. Fox, Jennie Hughes, the La Verde children, Fanny Wood and Harry Wood. Our correspondent says:—"Prof. Fox gives acceptable imitations of birds and animals. Mr. and Miss Wood are clever character change artists, and made quite a hit. Miss Jennie Hughes is a very engaging serio-comic vocalist, possessing a sweet, mellow voice, winning manners and attractive personal charms. The La Verde children execut

AND
AND SWEET CIDER VOCALIST, IS STILL AT THE
NEW ALHAMBRA THEATRE,
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA,
WITH
THE EMERSON MINSTRELS.
The following notice was in the Evening Bulletin of March 26th, 1872:—
ALHAMBRA THEATRE.—This pleasant retreat is crowded nightly and bids fair to hold its grip upon public patronage. Last evening the attendance was of such a nature that even good standing room was at a premium; and, as for seats, there were none to spare. An entire change of programme occurred. Stanwood, who is excruciatingly droll, sang new songs and told new stories; and, in response to an imperative encore, he gave a delightful banjo imitation of the chime of the bells. 3-1t*

WALTER H. WOODFIELD,
OF THE
PRINCIPAL THEATRES, LONDON, ENG.,
has seceded from Rankin's Theatre, St. Louis, having been previously engaged by JOS. JEFFERSON, Esq., for his summer tour, commencing April 8th.
Mr. Walter H. Woodfield, as George D'Alroy in "Caste," threw much refinement of sensibilities and impassioned acting into his delineation of the enraptured and—in the second act distracted—young husband, evincing the most telling qualifications for leading business in comedies of this style.—Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin, Aug. 23d.
Offenbach's operetta of "Litschen and Fritschen." Mr. Woodfield's Fritschen is a very fine impersonation. The music of the role is admirably rendered and received a well merited recall.—New Orleans Times, Oct. 27th.
Mr. Woodfield is a meritorious young actor, and possesses a very correct musical taste, which makes him valuable as the singing gentleman of a company, in addition to his other capabilities.—Journal of Commerce, St. Louis, March 3d.
